Discreditable Facts Concerning the English Aristocracy.

Preparations for the Grand Celebration at Rome.

The steamship Main, which left Bremen March 27, and Southampton March 30, reached this port yesterday, with two days later news than was already at hand.

A public meeting had taken place a few days ago in Paris upon the subject of the high price of house rent, but after some remarks had been made the Commissary of Police present declared the meeting dissolved; and, without listening to any remonstrances at once let the building. The persons present determined, however, that the proceedings should continue. About a hundred thereupon left, but about a thousand remained. The Avenir National says that this is the first time such an occurrence has been witnessed, and that it will soon be seen what is likely to come of it. The immediate result, it is said, is, that M. GUSTAVE FLOURENS, the chairman, is to be prosecuted.

A Paris correspondent writes to the Journal du Havre: "A rumor prevails in Paris that LEOPOLD, of Belgium, remarked to M. FRERE-ORBAN: 'You must understand that I would rather accept your resignation than quarrel with the Emperor.' This statement should, however, be received with distrust, as, had the King made such an observation, M. FRERE-ORBAN is not likely to have repeated it."

The Emperor NAPOLEON, accompanied by Admiral JURIEN DE LA GRAVIERE, the aide-de-camp on duty, went recently to Marshal VAILLANT's appartment in the Tuileries, to view a great number of objects which had belonged to NAPOLEON I., and which were lately bequeathed by the Princess RACIOCCI to the Prince Imperial. Among the interesting articles displayed was the tri-colored scarf which General BONAPARTE wore when he visited at Jaffa the persons attacked by the plague; the spurs which he had on at the battle of the Pyramids; several snuff-boxes belonging to the Emperor; also the one left behind by LOUIS XVIII. on the table when he took his departure just before the Hundred days; several volumes annotated by the Emperor, and among them the Voyage du Jeune Anacharsis en Grèce, and the Aventures de Télémaque; likewise a quantity of silver-gilt plate used by His Majesty at St. Helena. NAPOLEON III. examined the whole with great attention and interest.

The Emperor NAPOLEON has ordered the preparation of a decree granting a pension of 20,000f. to President TROPLONG's widow.

It is stated in the French papers that in consequence of continued ill health Count MONTALEMBERT will not offer himself for reelection as a member of the French Chamber, but will altogether retire from public life.

An avalanche had suddenly fallen on the Simplon road, near the Galerie des Eaux-Froides, and buried thirty Italian workmen coming from Dorne d'Ossola, and their two guides. The latter and ten of the former had not reappeared, only twenty having succeeded in saving their lives.

The Official Gazette of Lisbon publishes the decree, already mentioned by telegraph, modifying the electoral law in Portugal. In future only one member is to be returned by each District, and the number of the districts has been reduced. The new Chamber will be composed of 107 members instead of 179.

AFFAIRS IN ENGLAND.

The Irish Church Disestablishment Debate—The Easter Holidays—The Bremner Jones Demonstration—War on Ritualism—The Queen and Mr. Carlyle—The Late Earl of Glasgow—Aristocratic Immorality.

From Our Own Correspondent.

LONDON, Saturday, March 27, 1869.

The Irish Church Establishment bill has passed its second reading by the quite tremendous majority of 118, and Parliament has adjourned for the Easter Holidays. The debate was not interesting; still many more members wished to speak, to satisfy their constituents. They had pledged themselves to do their utmost to oppose the bill, and their utmost was to silently follow Mr. DISRAELI into the Opposition lobby at the division. There may be people who trust in the Lords, spiritual and temporal, to defeat the bill, but what can Dukes, Marquises, Earls, Viscounts, and even Bishops do against 118 majority in the House of Commons and JOHN BRIGHT in the Cabinet? Hopeless case. The Irish Protestants are still holding meetings, and perform their proper function—protest. And the Fenians, meantime, are giving enthusiastic receptions to their heroes, the released prisoners—one of the most recent being an ovation to Mr. STEPHEN J. MEANY, at which an old priest, 74 years old, presided, and made a very good address.

Mr. LOWE, Chancellor of the Exchequer, who, after all the abuse of last Summer, may now be seen any night talking as confidentially with Mr. BRIGHT as if they had always been boon companions, made a speech, which, though said to be lame, stilted and a failure, had yet some good points in it. Mr. SATHORN HARDY and Mr. GLADSTONE closed the three nights' debate, which would have been longer only that Mr. GLADSTONE threatened to sit through the holidays. To those who argued against the voluntary system, Mr. LOWE said, the only live religion in Ireland is voluntary, the dead being galvanified by its endowments. It was no business of the Government to erect or keep up bulwarks against Popery, and such bulwarks were like the dams of the river Shannon—the more you raise them the more the water would cover the country. The Irish Church had its opportunity in '72 to mediate against the penal laws, and had failed to do so. Failing to good, a source only of mischief and evil, it was the right and duty of the State to undo its bad work, and, so far as it is concerned, make an end of it. And so the word has gone out by a majority of 118—"against the barren fig tree"—"cut it down, why cumbereth it the ground?" This would be Mr. BRIGHT's and Mr. LOWE's way; but Mr. GLADSTONE's bill only takes away the State prop slowly and gently, leaving the tree to stand if it can, or fall if it must. The Church Times, though denounced as a viper, sticks to its verdict of "served her right," but wishes the matter fully debated.

"Just as in the case of a notorious criminal, even if caught red-hand, it is not permissible to omit any formality of justice which would be required in the gravest cases, so when such a sharp punishment as disestablishment and disendowment is proposed for institutions, it behoves the nation to be fully assured that public duty, not private malice, is the true source of the measure."

THE EASTER HOLIDAYS.

The Easter holidays in England begin on Good Friday. Railway excursions are advertised all over the kingdom, and all the popular resorts are crowded. "Good Friday is a great day at the Crystal Palace," where they had, yesterday, the Siamese Twins, Circassian Lady, Nova Scotian Giantess, a circus, full band of the Royal Artillery, and fifty thousand people sang "Old Hundred" and "God Save the Queen" in full chorus. Mme. TUSSAUD'S exhibition, in Baker-street, advertises for the same occasion life-size portrait-models in wax of JOHN WYCLIFFE, MARTIN LUTHER, JOHN KNOX and JOHN CALVIN. Nothing could be more appropriate for Good Friday, in the English fashion; and HENRY VIII. and all his six wives in a row are there to keep them company; but as Mme. TUSSAUD was a good Catholic, and has a handsome memorial-window of stained glass in the chapel of Our Lady, at St. John's Woods, her sons have made the wax figures of the Reformers as ugly and repulsive as could be done, with a proper regard to the feelings of a Protestant nation and the truth of history.

THE ERNEST JONES DEMONSTRATION.

The Times, yesterday, denounced in good set terms the Ernest Jones demonstration in Trafalgar-square last evening. Processions and bands of music, on Good Friday, it declared to be wicked, offensive, and, above all, un-English. The English hate military processions; everything in the shape of embodied force. "Every Englishman wishes to think for himself, feel for himself and fight for himself, and shudders at the very thought of a mass which may deprive him of free thought and free will. In Ireland that feeling is utterly unknown. Nobody there pretends, or even wishes, to feel or think or act for himself. The man who tries to think for himself is excommunicated from all sides." So, it is only the Irish in London, the Times says, who get up these offensive demonstrations, to vex the souls of Englishmen, and as to Mr. ERNEST JONES, he was not a martyr. He was prosperous, fat and happy.

Mr. JONES was radical to the last, and poor—not starving, penniless and friendless, certainly, as the Times thinks a martyr should be, but a man who had suffered and made sacrifices for his principles. And if Irishmen or any others chose to celebrate him, or the progress of the revolution, this scolding will not hinder them. The Times tells us that the last election, the first under the new Reform bill, was the most costly and corrupt ever held in England, and that the next will probably be worse—for all that. JOHN BRIGHT is a Cabinet Minister, and the Irish Church is to be disestablished. The Home Secretary has introduced a bill to introduce voting by ballot. The Colonies are to find their own troops and pay them. Useless ships are to be called home and laid up or sold. Useless arsenals are shut up—notably the great one at Woolwich; useless officers of the army, navy and civil service are to be reduced to half-pay and pensions, and so get something less for doing nothing. The universities are to be opened to dissenters—and dissenters themselves will soon be abolished by general Disestablishment. Women are to have rights of property—and men also, for husbands will not much longer be held to pay the debts their wives may have contracted before marriage. Now a woman may run in debt thousands of pounds for finery and enameling, to enable her to get a husband, because he must pay her debts. On the whole, I think there are signs of progress in some direction.

The Trafalgar-square political demonstration, like every one I ever saw in London, was, as a public spectacle, a sorry failure; but on the same day, in the lowest region of East London, the Wapping District, there was a demonstration of an entirely different character, which was an entire success. At 4 P. M. Rev. Mr. LOWDER, a Ritualist clergyman, with his assistants, choir and congregation, formed a procession, led by a golden cross valled in black, and for three hours moved though the streets of his parish, preaching at intervals the Stations of the Cross. As they went on the crowd gathered more and more, listened to the earnest and solemn discourse, and joined in the singing. During the whole of the circuit, though hundreds of persons of the lowest class joined in the procession, not a single offensive word was heard, nor was there the least disorder. Such a thing as a religious procession, and preaching the Stations of the Cross in the streets, has not probably been seen in London for centuries.

WAR ON RITUALISM.

The English Church Union, with its large subscribed fund, its publications and lectures, keeps up a vigorous war on Ritualism and Rome. Its present programme, impudently advertised in the Church Times, is: 1. Revision of the Liturgy, taking out of it every remaining rag of Popery, (and this revision would seem to admit that the Prayer Book, as it stands, favors the Ritualists.) 2. Reform of Convocation, with a larger infusion of laymen. 3. Legalization of marriage with a deceased wife's sister, now by the law of England incestuous. 4. Abolition of tests at Oxford and Cambridge. The last item is likely to be speedily carried, but not, I think, the rest of them.

A new Bishop of Natal has been consecrated in South Africa, vice Bishop COLENSO, supposed by some to have been long since excommunicated for applying the multiplication table to the Pentateuch. But as Dr. COLENSO is still held to be the lawful Bishop, and is sustained by an influential party here and in Natal, this only complicates the difficulty.

A correspondent of The Rock, a Protestant paper established expressly for the present crisis, gives that paper an interesting account of Dr. PUSEY, the High Church leader. He says:

"Six weeks ago I made the acquaintance of a lady to whom the secret was revealed by Dr. PUSEY's college chum; a Jesuit priest. Twenty years ago she was residing for some time in Austria; the house she occupied was the property of a community of nuns, to whom it was given by the Emperor; the Jesuit was the director of the convent; to him she paid the rent of the house every month. He thus became a constant visitor; he was a clever, agreeable man, and a good musician; he believed the lady to be a Roman Catholic, and, anxious for the conversion of England, he informed her that his Society were doing a glorious work there; that some of their members had got into Oxford, and one of their cleverest men was the leading man there, and had been educated in the same college as he was at Rome. The lady asked his name; he said 'PUSEY.' Some days after he asked her where she went to mass, as he had never observed her. She said: 'But I am a Protestant;' upon which he became deadly white, and said, 'Oh! what a revelation I have made.' He tried to make her promise she would not reveal what he had communicated to her under the impression she was a Roman Catholic. She says she has since often regretted she did not make it public. Some of your readers will doubtless say, how can Dr. PUSEY, a married man, be a Jesuit Priest? This is a puzzle I will unravel in my next letter."

Dr. PUSEY's friends at Oxford will be quite unprepared for this revelation; but there are many good people in England who will not be in the least astonished—who have all along suspected as much. For example, the favorite revival preachers in some districts of England are "converted sweeps, clowns, fiddlers and converted thieves." The worse the better. A converted nigger minstrel, who sings hymns to his banjo, is a great success. The last announcement I have seen is the following in a South London paper:

"NED WRIGHT, the converted burglar, will preach at Wandsworth Assembly Rooms, and break open the doors of hell with a gospel jimmy."

THE QUEEN AND MR. CARLYLE.

Since Her Majesty the Queen has become a popular author, she has taken means to become acquainted with some of her literary brethren, and a few days ago met Mr. CARLYLE, Mr. BROWNING and Mr. GROTE, at a little party got up for them by the Dean of Westminster. The Court Journal informs us that the interview was one of "a very pleasing and characteristic kind." One is glad to know even so much, but what would be characteristic in such an interview? Are we to fancy Mr. CARLYLE talking in his Dumfriesshire, "Latter-Day" and "Niagara" fashion, Mr. BROWNING rolling off some pages of Sordello, or Mr. GROTE deep in the mysteries of Platonic philosophy, or did they lunch together and complimentarily each other like ordinary mortals? We are also informed, by some one having exclusive intelligence, that the Queen, after half an hour's conversation with Mr. BRIGHT, expressed her surprise at finding him a man of so much intelligence!

THE LATE EARL OF GLASGOW.

The death is announced of the Earl of GLASGOW at the age of eighty-six. I must confess to my entire ignorance of this noble and distinguished personage, and now that his long and useful career is ended, I learn that he has devoted his whole life to field sports, horse racing, hunting, &c. I cannot remember his ever speaking in the House of Lords, but he was Senior member of the Jockey Club. It may have been one of his hounds of whose luxurious breakfast I read in the journals—while thousands of poor people barely live on the coarsest and poorest food, and some starve outright, this hound has tender mutton chops, nice biscuit, soft toast and eggs, washed down with half a pint of sherry. But it has long been notorious that the sporting dogs of the upper classes were for better lodged, fed and cared for every way, than the people whose labor on their estates supports them, their servants and their animals.

A weekly paper in the democratic interest gives a short obituary notice of the deceased nobleman, from which I cut the following:

"This man had an income of seventy thousand per annum, the major portion of which he spent in gambling and horse-racing. He was a heavy drinker, a tremendous swearer, a person of the most violent temper, passionate in the extreme, and, in fact, possessed nearly every vice to which humanity is prone, with barely one redeeming virtue. Here is an anecdote, as related in a daily paper, showing the arbitrary, reckless, almost bloodthirsty character of the depraved ruffian: 'He thought a golden plaster was sufficient for any injuries he might have inflicted on any individual, and he was ever ready to apply it; as, for instance, when he flung the waiter of the Black Swan, at York, from the first-floor window into the street, and the landlord complained to him on the subject, his only answer was, 'Damn him, put him down in the bill!'"

ARISTOCRATIC IMMORALITY.

Having so good a subject to begin with, my democratic friend goes on with his notion of the general character of the English Court and aristocracy, which Mr. CARLYLE thinks the basest, the noblest and especially the politest in the world. DENIS says:

"The very upper circle of society is nothing better than a hot-bed of crime and depravity. Flagrant and proclaimed vice passes unrebuked and unnoticed in the highest quarters. Adulterers and adulteresses and systematic seducers infest the Court, and no steps are taken to get rid of their unclean presence. For instance, the late Lord CARDIGAN, albeit he eloped with a brother officer's wife, and was guilty of many more equally immoral acts, was a constant visitor at Court, and come visitor at Court. Captain WESTCAR, of the Horse Guards, who did the same some two years back, was not deprived of his commission, but escorted, until the day of his death, a few months ago, the Queen and the royal family whenever it was his turn to do so. We have, in another aristocratic scandal of precisely the same kind, and we are curious to see if any steps will be taken in the matter by the Queen or her advisers. The Marquis of WATERFORD, a young nobleman of immense wealth, an officer in the Life Guards, a peer of Parliament, and possessed of Church patronage, has just eloped with Mrs. VIVIAN, a married woman and mother of four children. Will the Queen still continue the 'most noble Marquis' and adulterer as an officer of her body-guard? Will she not cause WESTCAR to be removed for a similar breach of social morality; and probably, as the offender in this case is a rich and influential noble, he will also escape with impunity. But what a bitter satire is all this upon our hereditary system! Here are men of immense character, fellows steeped in profligacy and depravity—legislators for the people, and distributors of clerical patronage!"

He goes on to the usual length of a leader, which is a sad temptation to wordiness and extravagance, but gets so coarse and abusive that I cannot follow him.

This case of Mrs. VIVIAN is one of those sad outbreaks in society which occur like other calamities. She is the second wife of Captain VIVIAN, M. P., and the noble Marquis, who is some years her junior, dined with them the day before the elopement. They went to Paris, taking their youngest child, an infant, and Captain VIVIAN followed—not to reclaim his wife, but to bring back the child. The lady, it is said, tried to kill herself with chloroform. The noble Marquis has sent his friend word that as soon as he could get a divorce, he as a man of honor would marry the divorcée. Captain VIVIAN can then marry again, and they can all dine together once more. Their fathers would have settled it with swords or pistols; but manners have changed—the Divorce Court takes the place of the duel.

The public had scarcely done gloating over this affair, come in the nick of time to enliven Lent, when their eyes fell upon the following portentous paragraph:

"The whisper of a grave scandal has become so loud in circles where reliable information is generally to be found, that it is no longer possible to leave it unnoticed. It relates to a very high personage, whose position ought to place him high above the breath of suspicion, but whose private life is sullied by excesses which threaten to bring disgrace upon the order to which he belongs, and even to sully the ermine of royalty itself. Had the causes of complaint or of reprobation been confined to private history alone, the probability is that the veil might not have been lifted; but it is asserted that a flagrant abuse of patronage has long prevailed in the department over which the person in question holds imperial sway, and that the storm of dissatisfaction is attaining a strength and impetuosity which will probably lead the House of Commons, in the interests of the public, to direct such an inquiry as the circumstances of the case may demand. The subject is one of extreme delicacy, but in a reforming age like the present, if suspicion justly attaches, it would seem but right that those who are responsible for the honor of the administration, whether it be military, naval or civil, should interfere, ere it be too late, to prevent a great scandal, if not a national reproach. It is rumored that certain facts in connection with the matter have been laid before the chief advisor of the Crown, and that the first move toward inquiry may possibly be in the shape of a motion in the House of Commons for a return of the appointments, pay, salaries, pensions and allowances held by the individual in question."

This does not refer to the Prince of Wales, who has been riding donkeys far up the Nile, and has now gone to Constantinople; nor to the Duke of EDINBOROUGH, who is steaming round the world. It may puzzle Americans, perhaps, but here it is as plain as print. It can only mean GEORGE FREDERICK WILLIAM CHARLES, Duke of CAMBRIDGE, grandson of GEORGE III., cousin of the Queen and Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, a very jolly bachelor of 50, born the day before Her Majesty, with the proverbial tastes of all his magnificent male relatives. Whatever the matter, it will be hushed up. The Queen, I believe, is very fond of her scapegrace cousin, who ought to have sown his last wild oat by this time, and his sister, Princess MARY, of Teck, is a general favorite. We shall not hear much more of the scandal; but members of Parliament and of the Government, who are determined upon carrying army reform into the highest quarters, will know how to make it useful.

PENSIONS AND SALARIES.

The hinted inquiry respecting salaries might be carried a good deal further with advantage, if it were acted upon. The Duke of CAMBRIDGE receives £60,000 a year in one item of pension. His pay and perquisites are probably double this amount. The Prince and Princess of WALES have an allowance of £250,000 a year, and as much more in income. Prince ALFRED has £15,000 and his pay. The Princess Royal has £40,000 to spend in Prussia, and so on. But the royal pensions are almost a matter of course—there are others more surprising, and some even astounding. A man who has ever been even for a few months Lord Chancellor or Judge has a very nice income for life. No need to make hay while the sun shines. And this rule applies to all public officers, down to policemen and letter carriers. Thus Viscount AVONMORE has a pension, paid out of the price of poor man's beer and tobacco, of £21,000 a year, gold standard; Lord CAMDEN, £20,000; Lord CHELMSFORD, £20,000; Lord COLCHESTER, £20,000; Lord WENSLEYDALE, £20,000. These are a few cases. It is a custom fast that while Lord CAMDEN gets a pension of £20,000 a year for life, Mr. DISRAELI, the Prime Minister who appointed him, gets only £5,000. These are odious comparisons, or burdens, on the backs of the people, there are remarkable. The late salaries of the Ministers alone, on an enlarged scale, are nearly half a million of dollars a year; the Judges' salaries and pensions are half a million; Post Office alone, $600,000; Civil Service, [illegible]; the Duke of WELLINGTON has a pension of £62,000; Mr. WARREN, £20,000; Duke of MARLBOROUGH, [illegible]; Duke of WILLIAM PENN, £20,000. Dear Sir, THURLOW has a compensation allowance of £2,000 a year. (I should like to know what Sen. Gen. Congress refuses the widow of an assassinated President $2,000 a year!)

Salaries are such as high in proportion as pensions. The places for the Royal household, horrible sinecures, are a sort of pension or reward for political services. Three things with the charges of Cabinets: Her Majesty's Steward, an Earl, gets $12,000 a year; Treasurer, who pays the market bills, or his clerk for him, $12,000; Master of the Household, Major Rowan, $8,000; Keeper of the Privy Purse, a mere clerical matter, $6,000; Queen's Private Secretary, who could not be trusted with the rattled grouse, or other functions, $6,000; Master of the Horse, $12,000; Master of the Buckhounds, these really are some of them, though the Duke of Cons may never see them—$6,000; Groom of the Robes—Major-General BEAUMONT, who personally or by deputy attends on Her Majesty's Royal petticoats—$4,000. These are only a few of them, for there are nearly a thousand persons attached to the Royal household, and paid for rendering some real, but mostly imaginary services to Her Majesty. As usual, those who do most get least pay. [illegible]

The members of the Cabinet, for the most part, work for their money. The Lord Chancellor has the largest plum in the pudding—$50,000 a year and the pension to follow. Mr. STANSFELD, Mr. LOWE, Mr. BRUCE, Mr. CARDWELL, Earls CLARENDON and GRANVILLE and the Duke of ARGYLL get the same as the President of the United States—$25,000 a year. Mr. CHICHESTER FORTESCUE, $22,000; Mr. MONSARRIER, $20,000; Marquis of HARTINGTON, $18,000; Earl de GREY, Earl KIMBERLY, Mr. BRIGHT and Mr. GOSCHEN, $16,000.

What seems to me the hardest thing in England is the small pay given to many who work very hard, and the good pay squandered on idlers. There are numerous persons in the pay of the Foreign Office at high salaries, who have not done a day's service in twenty years. One man, who has received $20,000, has not been consulted since 1824; another, who has lived in absolute idleness for forty-four years, has received over $150,000. There are numerous cases of this kind. A man, ever so clever and useful, is set aside by some Foreign Secretary, perhaps for a relative or favorite of his own, and goes upon the retired list when 50 years old, and lives till 90, receiving from $5,000 to $10,000 a year to live where he likes—fifty years enjoying his otium cum dignitate at the expense of people who work very hard and slave a little at times to pay their rates and taxes.

MONADNOCK.

AFFAIRS IN SPAIN.

The Situation in Madrid—The Cortes—The Constitution—Political Arrests—The Burgos Assassination—Reinforcements for Cuba—The Election in the Army.

From Our Own Correspondent.

MADRID, Tuesday, March 23, 1869.

At its rising to-day the Cortes will adjourn for a week. Many of the Deputies have left for their homes already, for with the prospect of a long session and hard work before them, they are naturally eager to avail themselves of the short respite afforded by the Easter holidays. General PRIM has invited a large party to his chateau in the Toledo Mountains. There was some talk of the invitations being countermanded in consequence of the disquieting appearance of things, but I see by the Correspondencia of last evening that such is not the fact. Among the guests, about sixty in number, is TAMBORRICK, the tenor. He has given up all idea of going to the United States, and I think he has done wisely. His voice is too much worn to satisfy the requirements of an American audience. Like BONCONI, all that he could give them would be the reminiscences of a once beautiful organ and admirable method.

Every one is leaving Madrid that can, for the weather just now is very trying, and there is a great deal of typhus prevailing. I shall follow the example of the crowd, and run down to Seville for the Holy Week, which is perhaps the best time in the year to visit it in. People flock to the city from all parts to witness the religious ceremonies, which are exceedingly curious, and in point of splendor said to be equal to those at Rome. Ordinarily, the ayuntamiento or municipality subscribes a large sum to defray the expenses. This year, being Republican, it has refused to furnish its usual contribution. The amount, however, has been made up by private subscription. The American squadron is expected this week at Cadiz, so that I can accomplish a visit to it as well as to Seville within the brief period for which the Cortes is about to adjourn.

Madrid was thrown into great alarm on Monday last by the menacing character of the manifestation which took place in relation to the Quintas, (conscription.) While the subject was being discussed in the Cortes the people were defiling by thousands into the open space in front of it; a large number of women, many of whom were in a state of intoxication, and vociferating and gesticulating violently, constituting an unusual and disgusting feature in the procession. At sight of them the mind of the spectator instinctively recalled the scenes by which the first French revolution was prefaced. In the crowd were borne banners which showed that the manifestation was not confined to the object for which it was got up. The appearance among them of one or two Republican flags was very much to be regretted, as the leaders of the party were totally averse to the demonstration being confounded with that of any particular political organization. Still less were they satisfied with the conduct of one or two deputies of the minority, Señor JOARISTI in particular, who addressed the crowd from the steps of the principal entrance in the most inflammatory language, and almost called upon the people to force their way into the chamber. Fortunately Señor CASTELAR, and several others of the cooler heads of the party, hastened out to repair the mischief, and by their eloquent entreaties prevented the occurrence of a proceeding which must inevitably have led to bloodshed. As it was, a body of about one hundred men, and who evidently obeyed a mot d'ordre, detached themselves from the crowd and endeavored to force their way to the side entrance. They were met by the police and the civil Governor of Madrid, who, by patience and firmness, induced them to fall back without proceeding to any further acts of violence. Perhaps, too, the consciousness that they were not supported by the general body of the crowd, may have had something to do with their retreat. This latter fact would go far to corroborate the impression that the manifestation was being made use of by the reactionists to bring about a collision. The misfortune in all these popular manifestations is, that the agents who are working in the interest of the ex-Queen and DON CARLOS invariably turn them to account, and pervert their true character by the introduction of objectionable mottoes and sentiments.

While Señor GARCIA LOPEZ was speaking in the Cortes against the bill for calling out 40,000 additional men for the army, several Deputies approached the Minister of War, (PRIM,) and an animated conversation took place between them. Presently PRIM gave some orders in a low tone to General Izquierdo, Captain-General of the Province, who forthwith quitted the House. Señor LOPEZ, on resuming his interrupted speech, said to the President that if anything had occurred which rendered it unbecoming that he should continue, he would resume his speech [illegible]

General PRIM then rose and said that with the permission of the President and M. GARCIA LOPEZ, he would explain what the latter might have overheard when he thought it necessary to pause in his address to the Chamber. He had been giving orders to the Captain-General to assemble the troops in their barracks in consequence of the threatening demonstrations which were taking place outside. Such proceedings could not be tolerated, and still less so from the fact that all the workmen who had been brigaded had been summoned to take part in them, and thus swell the menacing appearance of the crowd. The Minister of Fomento said that he had attentively watched the proceedings of the manifestation in question, and that MM. CASTELAR, SORNI and LUIS BLANC had used their utmost efforts to induce the crowd to disperse. Another deputy, however, whose name he did not wish to mention, had pursued a different course. [Great agitation, and cries of "Name, name."] The Minister said that the role of informer was not to his taste. This much, however, he would say, that there was a deputy belonging to the minority, who, when his colleagues had induced the crowd to commence dispersing, had again excited it by saying that the minority was powerless in presence of what had been proposed by the Committees and had been supported by the majority, and the consequence was that several groups had endeavored to penetrate into the Chamber in order to force a resolution from the majority, which, however, had courage enough to resist such violence, and combat it if necessary. [Cries of "Yes! yes!"] The deputy who had expressed himself thus belonged to that worthy minority whose conduct he had applauded on several occasions. On the day on which the Chamber had voted its support to the Ministry this deputy had abstained from voting, and had quitted his seat because he differed with his colleagues. (Here Señor JOARISTI entered the Chamber, and demanded permission to reply.) The Minister continued. This question had been distorted and agitated after the Government had done everything in its power to modify the severity of the conscription laws. The people of Madrid were precisely those who had least reason to complain, after the sacrifices made by their municipality, which had announced to them that it would find substitutes for all who might be drawn. Notwithstanding all this, the manifestation had been got up, and it had forced itself to the doors of the Assembly. And who did they suppose was most ardent in his efforts to prevent the crowd renouncing its purpose? It was a person whom he had been compelled to dismiss from his department, because he was secretly allied with and working for the Parti Moderé. He concluded by stating that if in the minority there were many members who had contributed to the revolution and who desired to consolidate its conquests, there were others who, he knew not with what object, excited the masses by the Press and by other means, to prevent their Government becoming esteemed and their credit strengthened, and to reduce them to the same condition as the unfortunate South American Republics. M. GARCIA LOPEZ declared solemnly that the minority were entirely strangers to the demonstrations going on outside. The minority acted in pursuance of its conventions, but this did not present each of its members retaining his right of initiative or acting on his individual account. But in no ways did the minority favor disturbances of the public peace, because on its benches was to be found as much, if not more, patriotism than could be boasted of on the opposite side. This terminated the incident.

The Ignaldad of yesterday reproaches the Minister of Fomento with having reported incorrectly the observations made by its editor, M. JOARISTI, at the manifestation of Monday. The following, it states, are the words which he really uttered:

"What has brought you here? Ah! you have come to seek the tranquillity of your families, the peace of your firesides, the future and the blood of your sons—the abolition of the Quintas—in a word, that tax of blood which I do not hesitate to qualify as a tax of tears and a tribute of despair. At the foot of these steps before the Constituent Assembly, the representation of the whole Spanish people, you have come to demand the cessation of this infamous lottery in which are gambled away the hopes, the liberties, and even the lives of the poor! What! shall I demand in the ranks of the Republican minority. To obtain it, it does all that it can; it seeks to do more, even, than is possible! But I must tell you the truth—the efforts of the Republican minority are entirely useless."

The Ignaldad adds: "Citizen JOARISTI had scarcely uttered these words when some of his friends crowded around him, and believing, doubtless, that his speech was about to produce an effect contrary to that which he intended, interrupted him, and drowned his voice so that our principal editor found it impossible to continue his speech, and was forced to return to the Cortes. After M. JOARISTI, the Republican deputies CHAO, SORNI, and another whose name we do not recollect, spoke and succeeded in dispersing the crowd."

In yesterday's sitting, M. JOARISTI demanded permission to state correctly what he had said, and made his explanation in the words above quoted. He added that he had been the first to propose to his colleagues to go and address the crowd and persuade it to retire. The Minister of Fomento reiterated the correctness of what he had stated. From what had fallen from M. JOARISTI, it was evident that there was a propagandism founded in bad faith against the Quintas, notwithstanding all the explanations that had been made by the Government, and all its good intentions. He would not read the articles of the journals of Madrid and the provinces which proved the existence of this propagandism, but he held one in his hand the language of which was most unjust and indecorous. In this article it was stated, among other things, that as the Ministers had already taken care of themselves out of the public treasury and had divided ten millions among the majority, (laughter,) they bestowed no further thought on the necessities of the country. Language like this must necessarily bring about such manifestations as had been witnessed that day. "The Government," added the Minister, "makes no promises which it cannot accomplish. It was ready to confront the unpopularity of the unreflecting masses, which one day was ready to cry "Vive Ferdinand VII.," and the next "Vive la Republica Federale," which combatted authority with certain manifestations when it existed and failed to defend it with any doctrine when it fell. After a few observations from M. M. JOARISTI and CASTELAR, the subject dropped. The Chamber then resumed the discussion of the law calling out 35,000 men for the army, which was again adjourned over to the evening sitting. The debate commenced at 9:30 and was prolonged until two in the morning. All the clauses of the bill were passed, and the law will be voted in its ensemble to-day, as soon as the Chamber meets.

THE CONSTITUTION.

It is expected that the project of the Constitution will be deposited in the Bureaux of the Cortes to-day, but no discussion will take place upon it until after the holidays. The articles are 131 in number. The form of Government is, of course, the monarchy, and the Senate is to be elective with a term of twelve years, renewable every three years by the reflection of a fourth. The Senators are to be chosen among a certain class of tax-payers, and are to be nominated by the Provincial Deputations. The Deputies are to be elected for three years, and the Ministers cannot appear in the Cortes unless they sat for some electoral circumscription. On the question of liberty of worship, the Committee will present three opinions. The majority report concludes in favor of the entire separation of Church and State. It is affirmed, but I know not with how much correctness, that this conclusion is favored by the prelates who sit in the Assembly. The minority, of which M. SALMERON ALONSO and the Ministers, TORANZO MONTERO, ULLOA, SILVELA and the Marquis DE LA VEGA ARMIJO, form part, propose the adoption of the Catholic religion as the religion of the State and toleration of for other creeds, with this distinction, however—that edifices devoted to the use of these creeds shall be distinguished by no external symbols opposed to Catholic ideas.

POLITICAL ARRESTS.

Among the arrests effected on Monday of parties exciting the populace to force their way into the Cortes were a Bourbon agent named ANICETO GARCIA PAGES, who has just arrived from Paris, and another individual who on the day of the opening of the Cortes had fired several pistol shots in the Carrera San Geronimo.

THE BURGOS ASSASSINATION.

The thirteen or fifteen individuals found guilty at Burgos of the assassination of the Governor of that town have just been sentenced to imprisonment and hard labor for life. The arrest has also just been effected at Burgos of the carpenter who is said to have given the fatal blow to M. CASTRO. There was found in his possession a hammer covered with blood, which is supposed to be the instrument of the crime.

REINFORCEMENTS FOR CUBA.

An official dispatch from Havana announces the embarkation of the insurgents under sentence for Fernando Po. General DULCE, although stating that the insurrection is being fast subdued, asks for fresh reinforcements to fill the gaps caused by the discharge of men from the service whose time is up, typhus, losses in battle, &c.

NEW ITALIAN MINISTER TO WASHINGTON.

The representative of Italy in Madrid, Señor CONTI, is about to leave for Washington as Minister to the United States.

DISAFFECTION IN THE ARMY.

A rumor is in circulation that a plot has been discovered among the military in favor of the Ex-Queen. Two regiments of artillery are said to be especially implicated. In consequence of these and other disquieting circumstances, it is announced this afternoon that General PRIM will not quit town for his country seat as intended.

FRANCE AND AMERICA.

An Extract from the Memoirs of Prince de Talleyrand—France and Germany. A Paris letter in the Gazette de Lausanne says:

"You are aware that Prince DE TALLEYRAND left some memoirs, which were not to be published till thirty years after his death, and which are now in the hands of an eminent barrister, M. AUDRAL. I have been able to obtain a glimpse of them, and I am much surprised at their contents. I was especially struck by a page relative to the Congress of Vienna. It is a real prophecy, and I cannot resist the temptation of giving you the substance of it. At that period DE TALLEYRAND said that the balance of power in Europe founded at that assembly was menaced by great dangers—one from beyond the sea, and the other which might arise in the heart of Germany:

'On the side of America,' said the Prince, 'Europe must always have her eyes open, and not furnish any pretext for recrimination or reprisals. America is increasing every day. She will become a colossal Power, and a moment must arrive when placed in more easy communication with Europe by means of new discoveries, she will wish to meddle in our affairs, and have a hand in them. Political prudence, therefore, imposes on the Governments of the old Continent the care of scrupulously watching that no pretext shall be offered for such an intervention. The day when America shall plant her foot in Europe, peace and security will be banished for a long time.'

The Prince afterward speaks of Germany. Here the prediction has no longer the form of a conjecture, but is in some sort an anticipated recital:

'No illusion must be formed; the equilibrium we have founded in the Congress of Vienna is not eternal. It will succumb some day or other, but it promises us some years of peace. What condemns it to a term, more or less distant, is the aspirations which are becoming universal in the centre of Germany. The necessities of defence and of a common peril have produced vague ideas of German unity; this idea will continue to be developed, and some day one of the great Powers which form part of the Conference will desire to realize this union for its own profit. Austria is not to be feared, since she is composed of pieces and morsels, and having no unity at home she cannot think of expanding it. Therefore, Prussia it is that must be watched. She will attempt the adventure, and, if she succeeds, then all the conditions of equilibrium will be changed, and new bases and a new organization will have to be sought for Europe.'

The Prince continues to examine the circumstances more or less difficult under which this reconstruction will be effected, and he points out France as the nation most interested in combatting the movement for unification, or in seeking a compensation."

A SUNKEN TREASURE.

Specie in the Zuyder Zee—An Attempt to Recover the Riches of the Deep.

From the Daily Telegraph, Nov. 26.

On the night of Oct. 7, 1799, Her Majesty's ship Lutine, freighted with an enormous amount of specie, varying from $1,500,000 to $3,000,000, foundered on the sand-banks off the northwest coast of Holland, and the greater bulk of that treasure still lies buried with but nine fathoms of water over it. The Lutine was bound to a port in the Zuyder Zee, and the $1,500,000 she had on board was subsidy money for the English troops who were then serving under the Prince of HOLLAND—Holland being at war with France. She had also on board large assignments of specie for merchants in the country, as well as for bullion dealers and bankers at Hamburg, to which port she was to have proceeded after landing the Government subsidy money at the port in the Zuyder Zee. There were also on board the Crown jewels of Holland, which had been sent to this country by the Prince of ORANGE to be reset and polished by Messrs. RUNDELL & BRIDGE, the then famous jewelers to the English Court, on Ludgate Hill. They had been placed in a strong iron case, hermetically sealed, and were shipped on board the Lutine, at Texel, a few days before she sailed, on the morning of Oct. 6; and it is alleged that the commander was so elated with his important commission from the bankers that the night before the vessel took her departure on her fatal voyage he entertained all the élite of Lowestoft and Yarmouth to a grand ball on board. Of the circumstances of her loss very little is known beyond the fact that, on the following night, the Lutine, in making for the entrance of the Zuyder Zee, encountered a fearful storm, and was driven on a sand-bank between the Islands of Terschelling and Vieland, and subsequently foundered, all her officers and crew, excepting one man, perishing. The survivor, however, only lived a few hours. He was picked up by some Dutch boatmen who found him floating on some spars, and after stating the facts of the dreadful wreck he died. Nearly 200 persons perished in the ill-fated vessel

MR. WELLS' LETTER.

Mr. Wells is Challenged—Views of Salt, Iron, Labor and Sewing.

THE BECCHES, Friday, April 2, 1869.

I do not wish to engage in any tariff controversy if the TIMES would give any measure of space to it; but I think the cause of truth and justice requires sometimes a correction of great errors, and which can only be well done at the time when they are made. I will ask you, Mr. TIMES, on this account to allow me a few words more in correcting Mr. WELLS. I wrote two letters, which I think were published in the TIMES, on his errors in regard to salt and iron. Perhaps Mr. WELLS never saw these articles; but substantially the same things were repeated in the Tribune. What, then, was my astonishment to find in the recent letter of Mr. WELLS to Mr. KELLEY the following statement:

"No one has challenged the statements of the Commissioner in respect to the higher and the balanced cost of pig iron, or the present relative cost of producing this article in the United States and in Europe. No one has disputed the evidence he submitted, showing that the present tariff on salt given to the manufacturers of Syracuse enables a monopoly to dictate their prices and to accumulate profits that are almost without precedent in the history of legitimate industry."

This is so boldly and palpably erroneous that the columns of the TIMES prove that I not only "challenged" his statements, but utterly disproved them by his own figures. But I understated the matter. Mr. WELLS' statements were more erroneous than I supposed them to be, and I will now show how entirely he has misstated the case:

1. In regard to salt, Mr. WELLS spoke of "such a monopoly." What is a monopoly? A monopoly is the "exclusive privilege of selling" anything. I know (aside from patent rights) but two approaches to a monopoly in the United States—the Union Pacific Railroad and the National Banks—and neither of them should be exclusive if I could help it. The term "monopoly" is no more applicable to the manufacturers of this country than it is to the right of suffrage. And now for Mr. WELLS' knowledge of facts. He says the salt manufacture of Syracuse and Saginaw has a monopoly, meaning by this (though not a correct meaning) that they have a control of the market. Now we will see what control they have. The following is the amount of salt made in the Ohio Valley, as reported to me:

Salt made at Pomeroy	3,000,000 bushels
Salt made at and near the Kanawha	2,000,000 "
Salt made in the Ohio Valley	5,000,000 "

Now, will you tell me how it is possible for Syracuse and Saginaw to have a monopoly against this competition? But that is not all. Salt is also made on the Muskingum and the Conemaugh, and the capacity to make salt in the Ohio Valley is apparently inexhaustible. But that is not all. Syracuse and Saginaw have tried the competition and failed in it. In the report of the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce for September, 1868, a document which it would be worth while for Mr. WELLS to look into, there is a paragraph stating that salt had been brought to Cincinnati in larger quantities than ever before, and in it a small quantity of Syracuse salt, which, however, could not compete with that of the Ohio Valley. So much for WELLS' salt blunders, which he has exhibited in no less than five pages of his report.

2. Let us look at his iron errors. He shows in his report that he understands figures better than he does how to apply them, and this is the common fault of all men who do not understand the science of statistics. I shall use only the tables of his report for the facts. He has two propositions on iron—first, that the duty on pig iron is too high; and second, that the duty on pig iron has raised the duty on bar and boiler iron so as to be unprofitable to the manufacturer.

About the tax or duty, he says the duty is $12 per ton, and the cost of making a ton is $26. The duty, then, is only about 46 per cent. on the cost of making, and if the foreign article can be brought into competition, makes the cost about the same as the domestic. Now, I submit, in view of the cheapness of foreign labor, whether 46 per cent. is too high?

The price of puddling iron in Europe and America is about as follows: United States, $15; England, $6 50; Russia, $2.

Now observe, I. That more than half the cost of a ton of pig iron is labor; and—II. That the price of the labor in the Welsh and Scotch iron is only half what it is in the United States; and we may here observe, that the price of common labor is only about half in England. The price of American labor is 50 per cent higher than English labor; but the tariff on pig iron is only raised 46 per cent.

3. Next, Mr. WELLS says, the price of pig iron is so high that it is unprofitable to the makers of bar and boiler iron. Well, what does that prove? Simply and only, that the duty on bar iron ought to be raised. If the duty on pig iron is no higher (and in fact it is not so high,) than the difference between English and American labor, then it is not too high, and the duty on bar iron ought to be raised to correspond with it.

4. In regard to the prices of labor—more particularly that of Europe—I have taken the facts from the tables in the report; and I hope that those who think we do not want a tariff, on account of the cheapness of European labor, will do themselves the justice to read his figures. So far as the main manufactures go, he shows that the price of American labor is, in fact, nearly or quite double what it is in England and Belgium. Our tariff averages forty-seven per cent. Why should it not, when European labor is fifty per cent. less than ours? I should like to know a good reason why we should not maintain the price of American labor by a tariff against European cheap labor? If we do not, it is absolutely certain the price of American labor must come down. Is that what the anti-tariff men are after to reduce the American laborers to the condition of those in Europe? That is the inevitable result of their theory carried into practice. But this same Mr. WELLS (verily, a Daniel come to judgment!) complains that the price of labor here is not high enough, because it is not so high in proportion as the price of living. He furnishes elaborate tables to prove this. Now, there is a very simple and a very just way of testing this. Bread and meat are the units of the cost of living, and are so recognized in the army and navy rations, in the poor-houses and infirmaries, and in all places where the cost of living is exactly calculated. So also the price of a day's labor (without special skill) is the unit of the cost of labor. Now, what is the proportion between them in the Central States? Ohio is the Central State. Let us see how these compare in that State. I will premise that, in making some calculations on this very point, three or four years since, I arrived at the general conclusion—in harmony with Mr. WELLS—that the price of labor had not risen in proportion to the price of provisions, and I think that is probably true of some portions of New-England now. The following is a comparison for Ohio in the years 1859 and 1868: In 1859—Labor, per day, 82 cents; cost of living, per day, 23 cents. In 1868—Labor, per day, $1 45; cost of living, per day, 40 cents. The price of living is taken from the prices of beef, flour, and sugar in Cincinnati at those periods. The advance in labor is 51 per cent., and that in provisions 73 per cent. There is, therefore, an apparent difference against labor; but is there no compensation for this? The truth is, it is more than compensated for in rents and clothing. Laborers pay but small rents, and the rise in that kind of rents since 1859 has not been 25 per cent. The laborers wear chiefly woolen clothes, but I think the cost of woolen clothing is no higher than in 1859. Now, taking all these things fairly into consideration, it cannot be said that the laborer is not in full as good condition to-day as he was before the war. There is another thing to be considered. Mr. WELLS, and men of his views, are fond of talking largely of the taxes and the burden of the taxes, and that it is paid by labor, &c., &c. Now, in my humble opinion, this is most particular humbug. Take the case between me and my man John. I pay a land tax—I pay an income tax—I wear broadcloth and pay a tariff on it. Now, John pays neither one of them directly nor indirectly. He has no land to tax—he has no income taxable—he wears home-made woolens. I am taxed on my labor, but he is not. In fine, he pays not one copper of tax, except what he pays on sugar and coffee, or on whisky and tobacco—which he feed not one iNow, I am perfectly willing and glad that he should be exempt from taxes; but I don't want anybody to be humbugging me with the cant that the laborers pay the taxes. Labor does pay a large part of the taxes, but it is the labor of manufacturers, the labor of lands—the labor of literary men and the labor of merchants, and not the labor of men who by law are expressly exempted from taxes.

I cannot follow Mr. WELLS through his meanderings; neither do I want to burden the TIMES with elaborate discussions of economical problems; but I could not refrain from noticing some of the obvious errors into which the Commissioner has fallen. If we were to have one legislation and policy on the facts and ideas furnished heretofore by the Treasury Department, we should be a hundred years behind the true American policy, and have degenerated greatly from the doctrines of our fathers. For myself I am an American, and greatly doubt the wisdom of adopting European ideas of economy and finance, when those very Europeans are overturning their political institutions to conform to ours. Is it not possible that when they confess themselves wrong on the great principle of politics they may be wrong also in political economy?

A VETERAN OBSERVER.

AFFAIRS IN CANADA.

Cabinet Matters—The Hudson Bay Territory—Copyright Law Demanded—The Annexation Resolutions.

From Our Own Correspondent.

TORONTO, Tuesday, April 6, 1869.

The Premier has been in a state of enforced idleness at Kingston, in consequence of the snow blockade on the Grand Trunk, but some of the Ottawa correspondents persist in saying that his absence was unaccountable. He has, at any rate, got back to the seat of Government, and we shall probably soon hear what the Ministerial programme is to be. Sir JOHN has a happy trick of misleading the public with the idea that he has nothing to offer to Parliament, up to within a few days of the meeting, when out he comes with a list of proposed measures. Of course his object is to better his opponents, and he tantalizes them enough before he gets fairly to work with the session. In so far as the measures to come before Parliament in the approaching session are concerned, no one seems to know anything yet, for the secret of the Ministry has been well kept, and it may be safely averred that not a supporter of the Government knows what is to be done. All is conjecture, and a state of uncertainty will prevail for some days yet. Rumor said it that Sir JOHN had come West in search of new colleagues, but that was evidently not the case. Another vacancy, but not in the Cabinet, is spoken of, to the effect that Adjutant-General McDOUGALL, who went to England some time since, will not return, consequently the office will become vacant. Speculation is already rife with regard to a probable successor, and the names of several prominent military men are mentioned. If there is really a vacancy, the appointment, like many others, will be deferred until it suits the Ministerial convenience. There is a judgeship vacant at Kingston which the Ministry do not appear to be in a hurry to fill, just because there are rival claimants who stand alike in the estimation of the Minister of Justice. The Judgeship in this city was allowed to go unfilled for a long time, to the great detriment of suitors, and was at last given to the Recorder, whose office had been abolished by an act of the local Legislature. It has long been known that the two Premiers do not work in harmony. The Attorney-General of Ontario imagines that the Minister of Justice is inclined to be rather too exacting, and that he will not stand. The latest difference is said to be with reference to the publication of the list of insolvents. At present they appear in the Canada Gazette, but Mr. SANFIELD MACDONALD desires to have those of Ontario published in the Ontario Gazette, and he is right. Little differences of this kind are constantly springing up, but serious difficulty may arise in connection with them some day, and if so the compact between the heads of the two Governments may terminate sooner than some people suppose. Sir JOHN is plausible and strong, but SANFIELD is stubborn, and not inclined to yield much. However, a difficulty will be avoided in the meantime, for it would not do to have trouble at this juncture.

THE HUDSON'S BAY TERRITORY.

The terms upon which the Colonial Minister has offered to settle the Northwest Territory dispute between Canada and the Hudson Bay Company, do not meet with general acquiescence. It is not so much the amount of compensation asked, as the desire to purchase the Company's so-called rights out and out, although it has never been admitted by Canada that those presumed rights had any legal existence, for it is now the prevalent opinion that it would be much better to pay a larger sum and get rid of the Company altogether, than leave them in possession of large tracts in the shape of station reservations as now claimed by them. The very fact of reserving some three thousand acres at each station throughout the Territory, shows that the Company do not want to give up their hold. The total station reservations is not to exceed 50,000 acres, but in addition to this the Company are to have the twentieth part of all the townships comprised in what is termed the "Fertile Belt." The thing is perfectly monstrous, and when the proposition comes before the Dominion Parliament, it is almost certain to be rejected. If the question is left to the Privy Council of England for adjudication, it is believed that much more favorable terms would be obtained, but that can hardly be expected after the proposition made by Earl GRANVILLE. The grasping of the Company is severely commented on, and it is seen to be obviously the desire to maintain as strong a hold upon the territory as possible. The Granville proposal is, First—To surrender to Her Majesty all the rights of government, property, &c., in Rupert's Land, specified in an act of the Imperial Parliament, and also all other rights not included in Canada. Second—Canada to pay £300,000 for the transfer. Third—The Company to select blocks adjoining each of its stations. Fourth—The blocks in the Red River territory not yet specified, but those outside that territory, to be 5,000 acres each block, the aggregate not to exceed 50,000 acres. Fifth—The blocks are to be in the shape of parallelograms. Sixth—The Company for fifty years after the surrender, may claim in any township or district of the Fertile Belt in which land is set out for settlement, grants of land not exceeding one-twentieth part of the land so set out. Seventh—The Fertile Belt to be bounded thus: On the South by the United States boundary, on the West by the Rocky Mountains, on the North by the northern branch of the Saskatchewan, on the East by Lake Winnipeg, the Lake of the Woods, and the waters connecting them. Eighth—All titles to land up to the 8th March last, conferred by the Company, to be confirmed. Ninth—The Company to be at liberty to carry on its trade in its corporate capacity, and no exceptional tax to be placed on the Company or its servants, nor any import duty on goods introduced by them prior to the surrender. Tenth—Canada to take over the materials of the electric telegraph at cost price. Eleventh—The Company's claim to land under a certain agreement to be withdrawn. Twelfth—The details of the arrangement to be settled at once by mutual agreement. Such are the terms upon which the Colonial Minister offers to accept the transfer of the Hudson's Bay country to the Dominion of Canada. There is no compulsion in the matter, however, for it is understood that if the proposition is objected to, either by the Company or Canada, the question is to be left to the arbitration of the Privy Council.

A COPYRIGHT LAW DEMANDED.

The Canadian publishers and their advisers have been in council. There has been a meeting in Montreal on the subject of a Copyright law, and the result is a petition to Parliament, asking it to direct the attention of the Imperial authorities to the necessity of a Copyright law for this country. Complaint is made of the injustice of the existing law, which prevents Canadian publishers reprinting the works of British authors, while American publishers are permitted to send such reprints into the Dominion under a tariff of 12½ per cent. There can be no question about the justice of a demand for a Copyright law for Canada; but by simply asking to be placed on an equal footing with foreigners the Canadian publishers do not mend the matter much, as a protection of 12½ per cent would not enable those to publish cheaper than those who have much greater facilities, and would readily enter the competition of trade, if under 50 per cent. Canadian publishers would ask to be put on a footing with Britishers, that they should be permitted to reprint British works so that they would be placed on an equal footing with foreigners; they certainly do not ask too much; but how can they expect to be allowed to reprint in a British territory without making terms with the authors? In the United States it is different, and anyone may publish and can reprint if they choose, without so much as saying "by your leave." As this is not a privilege, of course it could not be granted in Canada, and our publishers will have to be content as they are; for even if they had the right to reprint under a tariff of 12½ per cent., they would still be without the right of doing so, as the Imperial authorities would certainly not attempt to deprive the authors of the right they enjoy. The movement can only be regarded as an attempt to secure the prohibition of British reprints, and thus compel the people of this country to buy the more costly English editions.

THE ANNEXATION RESOLUTIONS.

The following are the resolutions Mr. CURLIE proposed in the New-Brunswick Legislature, but which fell to the ground. They have not yet appeared in any of the papers of Quebec or Canada:

Resolved, That the condition of the Province, under the most favorable circumstances, and even with increased taxation under the New Dominion, as many of the necessaries of life for which we pay, no corresponding return or advantage, with the most certain prospect of an increase rather than a reduction; will our people dissatisfied and leaving the Province by hundreds for the United States, there to make a home for themselves and their families, become worthy of consideration whether we should not, as a Province of the Confederation, be better off doing individually, and ask the United States to admit us into the Union on fair and equitable terms.

With the above resolution before the House, as cheerily as practically to close our ship yards, and building no ship; with merely one coasting steamer in the Provincial marine; with our fleet of coasters laying idle; with our lumber trade in a depressed condition; with our fishermen not able to make a living return for what has been invested, with our great manufacturing industry, the cotton factory, not able to pay a return for even one half the capital invested; with our Provincial revenue, by our commercial depression, so much reduced as to be unable to meet the ordinary and extraordinary demands of the Province; with our Government, in the face of our Provincial debt, and the precarious position of our provincial credit, and the depressed condition of our industry, and that can be but and must surely become, by a union with the United States, a portion of the Union, there is no alternative left to us but to consider and to devise and propose to this House the best course to be adopted to bring this union to a successful issue.

AFFAIRS IN PERU.

Progress of the Valley Navigation and Tacna Nearly Destroyed—Shipping Projects—The Home Rule Association—National Question—The Lottery Monopoly—A Curious Washerwoman.

From Our Own Correspondent.

LIMA, Peru, South America, Monday, March 22, 1869.

The yellow fever still holds its sway in Lima, although there is a perceptible decrease in the number of cases the present month as compared with the last. It is also of a milder type than last Summer, and not so fatal. Mr. CUSHING, the popular paymaster of the man-of-war Tuscarora, is among its latest victims. He died, and was buried at sea only two days before the Tuscarora arrived in Callao. The Tuscarora proceeded immediately to Valparaiso. She had been down the coast to settle a difficulty between the Consul and people of a small port. Mr. CUSHING was universally respected and his death is regretted. At the port of Arica the fever is committing frightful ravages. Tacna, fourteen miles from Arica, and a very active and enterprising place, has been almost destroyed by the scourge, and many smaller towns are nearly depopulated. In Callao there are fewer cases than last month, and of a still milder form than in Lima.

The tunnels on the new Arequipa Railroad are nearly completed. The new mole built at Mollendo has been finished. It is a solid work, and as only the best materials are used, it promises to be permanent and substantial.

It is in contemplation to build a new mole in Callao. One is needed there more than anywhere else, for the old wooden one, since the late earthquake, has become positively unsafe. Undermined and rickety, the small boats from the ships and men-of-war can hardly effect a decent landing, and a person must land on broken steps and is always liable to plunge into a hole where the rotten timbers have given away. The Government professes to be very anxious to build a new one, but lacks the funds, especially as they have been the past two years and over building a solid stone one, on which they seem to work often, but which never shows any advancement. It has been in the hands of several private parties, and ruined them all. If it ever should be finished, it would be a fine structure. Since my last letter four new branch railroads into the interior have been completed.

The Nacional has published two important decrees of the Government, one of which I have already mentioned, the establishment of a bank Monetario in any part of the Republic, and the other decree in relation to consolidating the home debt. In 1868 both these laws were sanctioned by the acting Congress, but the Executive had never acted upon them. The basis of the establishment of a bank will be of the same nature as the establishment of banks of the same kind in Lima. In consolidating the home debt the following credits only have been recognized: The national loan of 1864, the supply debt of 1865, the debt of reparation, the promissory notes issued by PRADO and CANSECO, those issued by Dr. BRUNO RUENO for $60,000, the notes issued in Arequipa by CANSECO, and in Ancacho by BERTRES in 1867, the promissory notes of Colonel BALTA, all salaries and pensions of war from 1853 up to the present, and the supplies made to the Constitutional army in 1867. All these credits will be changed into bills of 100, 500 and 1,000 soles, bearing 6 per cent. interest, and they will be liquidated at the rate of 50,000 soles a month. The Custom-house returns will also be hereafter devoted to the liquidation and payment of the interest of the home debt. This arrangement reads very well on paper, if the means are forthcoming to carry it out.

On the 2d of August, 1868, the Italian ship Emilia Rondanela was loading with guano at the Chincha Islands. Mr. PATONE, the Captain, had gone ashore, leaving in charge the mate, cook and boatswain. Three sailors on board tried to enter the cabin for the purpose of getting liquor or to commit robbery, it is supposed. They were repulsed by the mate and cook, and in the struggle one of the sailors, a Malay by birth, knocked the mate senseless by a blow upon his head, and immediately made his escape by jumping overboard and swimming to the nearest island. The Captain meantime had arrived and dispatched a boat for the Malay sailor. He was then arrested and brought on board in irons. He was then stabbed mortally five times in the back, and hoisted by a heavy belaying-pin. As soon as he was dead the Peruvian Governor of the Chincha Islands went on board, (having heard of the disturbance,) took the other sailors who were engaged with the Malay in endeavoring to break into the cabin into custody, and submitted them for trial before the Judge. Upon this trial the honorable Charge d'Affaires of Italy established a claim asking that the Italian Consulate should be recognized as the only competent authority to judge of the transgressions of any nature that may occur on Italian ships, and that an order be given "that the Peruvian authority limit itself to those measures that refer to their own jurisdiction in places where their Republic commands." This agitated a weighty question of international right. The Government thereupon issued two important decrees—first, that the national jurisdiction has no right to judge the sailors of the Emilia Rondanela, nor of any other Italian or foreign ship in like circumstances, and that the Governor overrun his authority; and secondly, that this declaration applies equally to all merchant vessels in all countries where any such or similar occurrence may transpire. It was, therefore, determined that the case filed of the Italian Charge d'Affaire be admitted, and the two sailors, as well as all parties engaged, have been brought down to Callao and given over to the custody of the Italian Vice-Consul, where their case will be disposed of.

Sixty thousand tons of guano were loaded into the loading of guano, but [illegible] charge after the old contract for loading had expired.

As there are more lotteries in Peru than in any [illegible] the Government [illegible] monopoly kept up for the benefit of the charities of this place, [illegible] dollars, (twelve [illegible] charities of Lima, the hospitals and many [illegible] cure of these [illegible] the Administrators are generally [illegible] and stewards, [illegible] board. One of the [illegible] of all of these hospitals [illegible] buying a ticket [illegible] the ticket. When [illegible] has drawn the prize, [illegible] deviation from the rule. These [illegible] travelling the country [illegible] to [illegible] voice, "Mille soles!" [illegible] dollars to be [illegible] will nearly every one, poor or rich, buys one or four tickets, each ticket being one sol! (50 cents.) The old [illegible] man then mounted upon [illegible] of your house and business [illegible] in a long black book, and the number of your ticket, and promises to notify you if your number has been the lucky one. Of course it is always such unfortunately if your number does draw the prize. The lucky number is always published in the leading papers of Lima. (Gamarra and Fanbandy and all the drawings take place in Lima, although in many tickets are sold as Callao is in Lima, and probably many more in proportion.) The drawing takes place in Callao in public, drawing the number. It happened not quite that my black washerwoman, an old decrepit Chilo woman, living in abject poverty in a miserable room in a calle-house, drew the lucky number, "mille soles." The agent came to notify her of her good fortune, but unfortunately the old crone had lost her ticket, and it could not be found. She, like all the poorest of her class had bought as many tickets, and in the years gone by, never took the fortunate one to draw anything, that she got careless, and laid her one real ticket away so thoroughly as to lose it. In vain she applied for the money, and several men of fortune, probably intended for her. The rule of the church is nothing doubtful, and she can't get the money. In 1865 lottery establishment in Callao drew another, but the old washerwoman's hoodlumness. There are many smaller lotteries then the mille soles, luckily, these for 50, $100 and $500, but the mille soles drew the most popular and patronized, although every lottery is a regular legalized business hole, and ought to be conducted on a perfectly fair basis. I know the poor people derive all pleasure revenue from these sources. These people are great gamblers, and fairness and the drawing of not are common occurrences. Everything is raffled for; a horse, a plate, diamond—every valuable article. The charge for Government so often throws out of salary numbers of officers, subordinates and the like, and they, like all their kind, having been living to exceed their means and salaries, resort to raffles to raise money on their furniture, clothing, diamonds, and even the women in the family make their dresses and under-clothing, and everything by which they can raise a penny for their necessities. LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

Law versus Common Sense.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The author of the "Comic Blackstone" represents the Judge walking a tight rope with a balance pole, and as the attraction of gravitation preponderates on either side, up goes plaintiff or defendant, with a fair chance of both coming to the ground.

In the case of BONIFACE vs. BELTRA, in the Superior Court, reported in 5 Abbott's Practice Reports, new series, page 380, a Mr. DARROW employed Mr. BELTRA, an undertaker, to attend to the funeral of his father—to furnish the coffin, open the grave, and furnish five carriages and horses. Mr. DARROW invited Mrs. BONIFACE to attend the funeral; she did so, and entered one of the carriages, went to the cemetery, and to quote the case:

"On leaving the cemetery the carriage came down and stopped at a hotel; the driver got off his box, and went into the hotel. He had but shut the door of the hotel, when the horses started on a walk; he walked a few steps and then started to run after them. The carriage struck some obstacle and the plaintiff was thrown out and injured."

It further appears from the case, that the defendant did not own the coach or the horses, but that they were owned by the driver.

Mrs. BONIFACE sued the undertaker, and the jury awarded $200 damages, when he appealed to the general term, where the judgment was set aside on the grounds, first, that the driver was not the servant of the undertaker, and, second, that there was no privity of contract between Mrs. BONIFACE, the invited guest, and the undertaker. How could Mrs. BONIFACE have known that the driver owned his horses and coach? Could she have foreseen, in entering one of the five coaches, that in case of injury through the negligence of the driver, the responsibility might be divided between five or even ten individuals, for one man may have owned the horses, another the carriages? On the point of the responsibility of the undertaker she could hardly make herself secure, unless on the solemn occasion. After the coffin was deposited in the hearse she had called out for the undertaker and demanded explicit answers to fifty questions or more, similar to the following: Are you the undertaker? Make an affidavit of the fact. Yes or no? Are you responsible? Do you furnish the carriages for this funeral? Do you solemnly promise that you will not attempt to avade your responsibility, in case one of the drivers wants a drink? &c. After all the invited friends had gone through with this examination, what time would the funeral start? So much for the first ground that the undertaker was not liable. The second ground appears equally absurd—"no privity of contract." Did not the undertaker expressly agree to furnish the carriages for Mr. DARROW and his friends? Mr. DARROW could not possibly occupy the whole five at once. A friend invites you to ride down town in a livery coach; through the negligence of the driver you are precipitated through the window of the carriage, head first, into the stomach of a fat man; you sue the livery-stable keeper and fail, first, because the driver owns his whip; second, because there is no privity of contract.

But this is not the law, for we find in the text in 2 Kent, page 439, and fully supported by the references, "If a servant employs another servant to do his business, and in doing it the servant so employed is guilty of any injury, the master is liable." The case in point is abundantly bolstered by decisions, and the decisions are good law, but the great trouble is they are not in point.

Absurd decisions like the above tend to bring the law into disrepute, to foster the idea that a suit at law merely depends upon the whim or caprice of the Judge, and perhaps justify a Senator in taking up the cry.

If we were to suggest a remedy it would be: Hold each individual Judge to a strict accountability for his decisions in the public Press. B.

NEW-YORK, Tuesday, April 6, 1869.

No Beats in the Game.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

I dare say it is a very small matter to Mr. R. E. RIGGS, Superintendent of the New-Jersey Central Railroad, and to Mr. H. P. BALDWIN, General Passenger Agent of the same, that people should be obliged to stand in their cars when they have paid for seats, but I for one desire to make a strong but courteous protest against their mismanagement in this particular.

Any one who uses the general accomplish night and morning on the through trains for seats, cannot but feel there ought to be enough for all without racing for them. At Elizabeth the 5 o'clock train is boarded every morning to the peril of life and limb, long before it is stopped, and in nine cases out of ten when the cars are ready to start there are no seats left. It is hardly necessary to point out to the management that this is, to draw it mildly, A wrong, and a breach of contract.

I have been traveling between New-York and Elizabeth for the last five years, for the past eight months on the New-Jersey Central, and I must say, without prejudice, that the passenger accommodations on it in no wise compare with those on the New-Jersey Railroad Company's lines.

It is easy to make allowances for special accidents, as where a train breaks down and is obliged to transfer the passengers to another, but [illegible] all others must succeed. I trust that the Commissioners will express the decision of the equal [illegible]

As a consistent temperance man I am in favor of a prohibitory law, and will never consent by my votes to the principle of legalizing the infamous traffic in rum, yet I hold it to be my duty to enforce every law which regulates or restrains the traffic, and to strive to secure its repeal by more stringent laws to restrain the traffic.

Yours in haste, J. O'DONNELL.

IMMIGRATION FROM ENGLAND.

Canada and the United States—Letter from John Stuart Mill.

To the Editor of the Toronto Globe:

The inclosed letter from Mr. JOHN STUART MILL was received in reply to one addressed to him inclosing a proof of my proposition for an emigration system. Mr. GOSCHEN's declaration in Parliament is important and suggestive. Has it come to pass that the Government of England is so considerate of the welfare of the poor, as to arrange for their expatriation to an alien country, in preference to this or other colonial portions of the Empire? Or are the advantages of the United States, and perhaps of the Australian Colonies, so persistently and successfully laid before the Home Government and people, that they do not believe that Canada offers equal inducements to industrious immigrants. If the Home and Dominion Governments would but agree to change the route of the Intercolonial Railway from the "long" to the "short route," and expend the money so to be prudently saved in building 150 miles of railway, and opening 800 miles of water communication between Fort William and Red River, what a field would be opened up for the people who are in such a "miserable state" at home. Less than half the amount to be saved by changing the route of the Intercolonial Railway would make the route from Fort William to Fort Garry passable in three days. The Pacific Railway, along its whole length to Salt Lake, passes through as such country as that which is ready for the plowman to the west of Fort Garry. Yet the overflowing tide of human life and energy "running over" from Europe, and skillfully piloted along those never-ending lines of railway, are covering those western prairies with our kindred, who could with equal facility be guided to the banks of the Saskatchewan and Assiniboine. BRIGHAM YOUNG has come to populate his arid country beyond the Rocky Mountains, then has been accomplished directly by the successive Governments of Western Canada within ten days' sail of Liverpool. Your obedient servant,

TORONTO, April 1, 1869. G. LAIDLAW.

MR. MILL'S LETTER.

BLACK HILL PARK, EXETER, March 7, 1869.

DEAR SIR: I beg to acknowledge your letter of the 8th ultimo, with its inclosures respecting a plan for systematic emigration to Canada. The time is very favorable for the reception of such a plan in this country, as attention has of late been called in an unusual degree to the miserable state of the English agricultural laborers, and to the possibility of making emigration available for their relief; and Mr. GOSCHEN, the new President of the Poor Law Board, has declared in Parliament that the subject is under his consideration, with a view, however, to the United States rather than to Canada.

It would be highly desirable that the promoters of your plan should enter into direct communication with Mr. GOSCHEN, and that he should be enabled as soon as possible to judge what amount of assistance the Canadian Government may be willing to offer toward the cost of the emigration.

I am, dear Sir, yours very faithfully,

J. S. MILL.

The Freedmen's Bureau—Letter from General Howard.

The following letter from General O. O. HOWARD, in answer to a letter of inquiry addressed to him by Hon. G. H. DODGE, Chairman of the House Committee on Freedmen's Affairs, exhibits the present status of the Freedmen's Bureau:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 9, 1869.

Hon. G. H. Dodge, M. C., Chairman of Committee on Freedmen's Affairs, House of Representatives:

DEAR SIR: I have received your note, and will cheerfully comply with your request.

As to the work of education among "the freedmen and refugees," I have already closed up all division of the Bureau except the educational work, the payment of bounties, and the hospitals—one at Vicksburg, one at Richmond, Va., and one in this district. I think a larger expenditure of money has been made in old established buildings in cities and villages than I would have advised with my present experience. Now that prejudice is giving way, the educational work can be extended more than heretofore into the country with comparatively small outlay, by seeking the co-operation of the people. We have already quite a corps of colored teachers, and soon will have more; and we know these can go into the country schools and be received well. I propose, if possible, to have but one agent in each State hereafter, so as to save every cent I can in order to use the remainder of our appropriation for the starting of schools in places where the people have been too long deprived of them. I have been obliged by law to cooperate with their benevolent educational associations, and in aiding them to prepare teachers. I have been necessitated to help maintain some of the higher grades. You may remember, as you suggest, to aid the country schools more in the future, and the normal schools, academies, colleges, and universities less. But, as we still need colored teachers for Texas and United States, I might be up to the Bureau completely by an amendment. I have no other object than to carry out the will of Congress on this subject. Yours, truly, O. O. HOWARD, Bvt. Maj. Gen'l U. S. A., Commissioner, &c.

P. S.—You will notice by the reports schools for children of "refugees" at Fortress Monroe, Richmond, Va., Wilmington, N. C., Norfolk, Va., and Nashville, Tenn., and a few others. These children are all white. O. O. H.

The Military Force in Canada.

From the Montreal Gazette, April 3.

There have been rumors afloat for some days past to the effect that orders had been received from Great Britain countermanding the withdrawal of the troops in the Spring and the proposed sale of the horses belonging to the artillery and cavalry now quartered in Quebec and Ontario. It was these rumors which probably gave rise to the further report that a Fenian raid was anticipated in the Spring, and that the military authorities were preparing accordingly. We have quite recently heard still another rumor, which we give simply as a rumor in the absence of official information, but which may prove to be the true one, and account for the order countermanding the reduction of the Canadian military establishment, that is, if one has really issued. It is to this effect—that the Imperial and Dominion Governments are in correspondence on the general question of Colonial defence, and that, in accordance with the well-known doctrines of the Manchester school, Mr. CARDWELL refuses to maintain the present establishment in the Dominion, unless our Government agrees to pay a large contribution toward its cost; as is now the practice in Ceylon and some of the Australian colonies.

In the meanwhile, the Imperial Government is acting upon its determination to place Canada on a thorough "peace footing." All the supply branches of the army now in the Dominion—commissariat and staff corps, &c., &c.—are about to be placed under the charge of a Controller, now at sea on his way out, who will be assisted by Messrs. GRELATLEY and PALMER, of the Commissariat in this city. Still other changes are expected in order to consolidate and reduce the expenses of the different supply departments, in pursuance of the economical policy drafted by the new Board of Army Control.

The Fritchie Homestead in Frederick.

From the Frederick (Md.) Examiner.

The work of widening Carroll Creek, in West Patrick-street, preparatory to the erection of a new bridge, has been commenced. The old Fritchie property, on the south side of the street and adjoining the creek, was sold last Saturday to Mr. JAMES HORWOOD, of this city, for the sum of $300. According to the terms of the contract under which he bought it, he is required to remove the building by the 15th instant, to make room for an extension of the limits of the creek, and thus, in a few days more, the old "Fritchie Homestead," rendered so famous and historic by the heroic conduct of its late owner during LEE's invasion of Maryland, in 1862, will disappear before the rude touch of our enterprising corporate authorities.

AGED COLORED PERSONS.—There are at present two occupants of the city hospital, whose united ages reach 231. PATSY MILLER was born in Charles City County, Va., in 1768, and is consequently 112 years old; while BEN. TAYLOR, who was born in New-York in 1760, has arrived at the age of 109. Old BEN. is a preacher, and holds forth regularly every Sunday. Notwithstanding their weight of years, the old people keep along remarkably well.—Columbia (S. C.) Phœnix, April 3.

GEORGIA BETTER THAN HONDURAS.—We are told, directly after the war a family living near Macon, with some $6,000 in specie, went to Honduras, expecting to realize a large fortune. A pretty long residence in the desired haven of rest nearly starved them and exhausted their means. They could muster sufficient for a return to Georgia, which they have done, and are content to remain in the State the remainder of their lives.—Augusta (Ga.) Constitution, April 1.

The Providence City Council sometimes does some things quickly. It recently had before it a bill increasing salaries of city officials in a singularly reckless and disproportioned way. The Council passed it, expecting the Board of Aldermen to non-concur, then to have a Committee of Conference appointed, which would agree upon the proper bill to be passed. The Board of Aldermen concurred, in the expectation that the Mayor would veto the bill; but that officer preferred to allow it to become a law by pocketing it. There can be no remedy for a year to come, as the law provides that the salaries shall be fixed in March.

DON PEZZI called upon President GRANT recently, and in concluding his account of the hard interview says: "Finally, I said, 'Good-by, Mr. President. I hope you will have health and strength enough to reform our civil service, and get the revenue honestly collected and disbursed.' 'I intend to try,' he replied; 'and if one set won't do it, I'll try another, and keep trying until I find honest and capable men.'"

HEREDITARY ABILITY.

Some Striking Examples from the History of the Massachusetts Supreme Court.

From the Boston Advertiser, April 6.

The subject of hereditary ability has attracted some attention in England lately, and a very curious letter was recently published in the Times, founded upon Mr. FOSS' tables of all the English Judges from the earliest times, showing in what a number of instances several members of the same family, often in direct descent, have attained a high position at the English Bar, and have been appointed to the Bench. A similar list can be formed from the Judges of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts, and, in proportion to their number, perhaps quite as remarkable as that which the industry of antiquaries has discovered in England.

From the list published in the Manual of the General Court for 1869, p. 185, it appears that between 1692 and 1772 there were thirty-three Judges of the Superior Court of Judicature of the Province of Massachusetts Bay. Among these were three CUSHINGS, two SEWALLS, (both Chief Justices,) two LYNDES, (also Chief Justices,) and two HUTCHINSONS; and members of the distinguished families of WINTHROP, DUDLEY, LEVERETT, QUINCY, SALTONSTALL and OLIVER.

Since 1775, there have been forty-two Justices of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts, from whom we have selected the following names:

JOHN ADAMS, the first Chief Justice, and the second President of the United States, whose family is too celebrated to need special mention.

WILLIAM CUSHING, the second Chief Justice, and afterward Judge of the Supreme Court of the United States; a near relative of

NATHAN CUSHING, Judge 1790-1800, and of

CALEB CUSHING, Judge 1802-04, and afterward Attorney-General of the United States, and of ROBERT TREAT PAINE, Judge 1790-1804, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence.

JEDEDIAH FOSTER, Judge 1776-1779, was the father of DWIGHT FOSTER, Chief Justice of the Common Pleas and United States Senator from Massachusetts, and of THEODORE FOSTER, United States Senator from Rhode Island, and great grandfather of DWIGHT FOSTER, Judge 1866-69.

FRANCIS DANA, the fourth Chief Justice and Minister to Russia, was the son of RICHARD DANA, Judge of the Provincial Court of Common Pleas, and nephew of EDMUND TROWBRIDGE, the ablest and most learned of the Judges of the Provincial Superior Court; and was also father of RICHARD HENRY DANA, the poet; grandfather of RICHARD HENRY DANA, Jr., one of the prominent leaders of the Boston Bar, and uncle of General GEORGE KINNAIRD DANA, of the English army.

JAMES SULLIVAN, Judge 1776-82, and afterward Governor, was a brother of General JOHN SULLIVAN, and father of the late Hon. WILLIAM SULLIVAN.

THEOPHILUS PARSONS, the fifth Chief Justice, was the father of the Hon. THEOPHILUS PARSONS, Dane Professor of Law in WASHINGTON.

The Closing Hours of the Present Session of Congress.

The New Reconstruction Bill Passed by Both Houses.

Further Debate in the Senate on Pacific Railroad Matters.

An Extra Session of the Senate Called by the President.

A Large Number of Nominations Ready to be Sent In.

Special Dispatches to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Friday, April 9.

The Senate went to work with a will this morning. There was none of what is technically called morning business. The last hours of the session were drawing to a close, and every one manifested a desire to set legislative seal on the few measures which it was deemed important to pass.

The only report from a committee was that presented by Mr. TRUMBULL from the Judiciary Committee, on the Reconstruction bill of Virginia, Mississippi and Texas. He recommended the passage of the House bill with a few unimportant amendments of detail. Mr. MORTON immediately offered as an amendment his resolution of yesterday, that the ratification of the Fifteenth constitutional amendment be insisted on as condition precedent before these and the other States be restored to their relations with the General Government. It was feared at first that this would give rise to so much debate that the bill would be necessarily killed. Rumors that GARRETT DAVIS intended to speak six hours, and that Mr. STOCKTON was to follow in an argument to last all night, were set afloat, but it soon became evident that the Democrats did not intend to filibuster, and the fears of the friends of the bill were allayed. Mr. TRUMBULL opposed the amendment of Mr. MORTON, and Mr. CONKLING followed in some forcible remarks on the same side. The Democrats made the usual party speeches prophecying future disasters from such partisan legislation; but the vote was soon taken, and the amendment was adopted by ten majority. Then, after some further amendments, the bill was put on its passage. Mr. SERAGUE was the only Republican who voted against it.

The most important bill taken up next was the one to reimburse loyal owners of steamships which were seized and used by the Government in the late war. It was debated and amended till about 5 o'clock, when a motion to go into Executive session and to meet again for legislative purposes at 7:30 prevailed.

When the Senate again met at that hour the galleries were thronged with ladies and gentlemen, the latter composed principally of office-holders and office-seekers. About 8 o'clock the bill facetiously termed to protect the interests of the United States in the squabble between the Union Pacific and the Central Pacific Railroads was taken up. The adherents of the Central Pacific Road mustered in strong force, and half-hour followed half-hour in tedious debate on this seemingly never-to-be settled question.

At 10:35 o'clock the Pacific Railroad bill, with numerous amendments, left the Senate and was sent to the House for concurrence by that body. A dozen Senators immediately jumped to their feet and shouted to the President pro tem. for recognition. Mr. MORTON was successful, and he moved that the Memphis and El Paso Railroad bill be taken up. Protests came from the opponents of the measure, and its friends insisted on a call of the yeas and nays. A cross fire arose on the subject, to end which Mr. SHERMAN moved an Executive session, which was carried, and at 10:40 P. M. the galleries were cleared and the doors closed.

The resolution, as passed by the Senate, embodies the basis of a settlement understood to be agreed upon between the two companies. The point of junction is fixed at Ogden, but the Union Pacific will continue to build on until the two roads meet, and the Central Pacific will pay for the same. The President is authorized to appoint a board of five eminent, experienced, and disinterested railroad men to examine and report upon both roads. The Attorney-General is authorized to investigate the action of both corporations to ascertain whether either of them have violated their charters, &c. There are other stringent provisions which are satisfactory to both sides. At midnight the bill is still on the Speaker's table, but will probably be reached before adjournment.

TWELVE O'CLOCK.—The Senate is in Executive session, discussing the nomination of J. M. ASHLEY as Governor of Montana. There is strong opposition, and the debate promises to last some time. As his name is on the head of the list, no other nominations have yet been reached. There are but two or three others, out of two hundred, that are disputed.

The House at this hour has just refused for the second time to take a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning. The conference on the Whisky and Tobacco Tax bill is concluded and must be acted on or the bill is lost.

THE NEW RECONSTRUCTION BILL.

At 9:30 o'clock to-night General BUTLER moved to proceed to the Speaker's table in order to get at the Senate amendments to the Reconstruction bill. The Democrats at first showed signs of resistance by filibustering, but after three or four dilatory motions their tactics were cut short, the rules were suspended, and by a party vote the amendment was concurred in without debate, and the bill goes to the President. The success of this measure so practical and important, in such a brief space of time, after the efforts of four months had failed, is due almost entirely to the practical good sense of the President.

REMOVAL OF POLITICAL DISABILITIES.

The House to-night, at 9 o'clock, after much sharp debate, passed by a bare two-thirds vote—ninety-seven to forty-seven—a huge Political Disabilities bill, containing nearly a thousand names. This bill goes to the Senate, and at the same time there is a Senate bill of the same character on the Speaker's table, which will be passed before adjournment.

NOMINATIONS BEFORE THE SENATE.

The proclamation of the President convening an Executive Session of the Senate on Monday next, was delivered to the Senate this afternoon at 3 o'clock. It is in the usual form of such documents.

No nominations, save the Collector of Internal Revenue, were sent in to-day, for the reason that the Senate still has nearly 200 names on its calendar, all that it can act on before 12 o'clock to-morrow, and by the thirty-seventh rule all nominations remaining unacted upon at the moment of adjournment fall to the ground, and must be re-appointed. Hence a large number of appointments, ready or nearly so, will be held until Monday. The Senate will probably confirm everything before it with few or no exceptions, before adjournment to-morrow. The President, with his Cabinet, will be at the President's room of the Senate to-morrow morning, at 10 o'clock, for the purpose of signing bills that may not have reached him previously.

PRESIDENT GRANT.

The pressure on the President was checked to-day by his own action. Having certain matters requiring immediate attention, he retired to his library with his Secretary, and declined to see any one until the hour for Cabinet meeting. The President refuses to see any one in his business office during the evening, except by previous appointment; many visitors call, but if received at all, they go to the private parlor, where the social aspect forbids the introduction of grossly business conversation.

NEW MEMBERS IN THE HOUSE.

The best part of the day's session in the House was occupied in the discussion of the Myers and Moffatt contested election case from Philadelphia. After numerous speeches, the report of the Committee was sustained. Mr. MOFFATT was unseated and Mr. MYERS was seated by a strict party vote. Three of the Connecticut members, Messrs. KELLOGG, STARKWEATHER and STRONG, Republicans, were sworn in to-day on informal certificates, there being no question as to the election. Mr. BARNUM, Democratic member from the Fourth District, did not appear. It may be noted for the benefit of office-holders and office-seekers in Mr. BARNUM's district, that Mr. BEARDSLEY, his defeated competitor, is here, and will be accorded the same consideration in recommendations for office as if he had been elected.

PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE PRO TEM.

Vice-President COLFAX left town this morning for Ohio, when the Senate was called to order by the Secretary. Mr. SUMNER offered a resolution that Mr. ANTHONY be appointed President pro tem., which was carried nem con.

THE ALABAMA CLAIMS.

On motion of Mr. SUMNER, this morning, it was ordered that the correspondence growing out of the Alabama claims between the United States and England be printed for the use of the Senate. These documents and papers are the most voluminous presented to Congress in some years, and will make six of eight volumes of four or five hundred pages each.

Dispatches to the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, Friday, April 9.

PACIFIC RAILROAD BONDS.

There was a full meeting of the House Committee on the Pacific Railroads this morning, at which, after a long and animated discussion, it was agreed to report the following resolution to the House, as the basis of a joint resolution to be passed by the House and Senate:

Resolved, As the judgment of this Committee, that, pending the investigation ordered by this House on the 29th day of March last, as to the alleged illegal issue of United States bonds to the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California on the 3d day of March last, no more bonds of the United States should be issued to said Company for work done east of Monument Point, or until the final completion and acceptance of said road by the Government; and that, during the pendency of this investigation, no further bonds of the United States should be issued to the Union Pacific Railroad Company for work done west of Ogden, or until the final completion and acceptance of said Union Pacific Railroad by the Government; provided, that nothing contained in this resolution shall be construed as bearing upon the question involved in the investigation under the resolution of the House as to the location of said lines of the road, or any fraud alleged therein.

The Committee also agreed to ask the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, or such Sub-Committee as they may designate, are hereby authorized to sit during the vacation, at such times and places as they may deem advisable, for the purpose of making the investigation ordered March 29, and the ordinary and necessary expenses of such committee and their clerk shall be paid during the time they are engaged in such examination.

THE CONSCIENCE FUND.

A letter was received at the Treasury Department this morning, containing a $100 bill, with the request that it be deposited in the conscience fund. It had been addressed by the sender to Mr. FISH, Secretary of the Treasury, postmarked Princeton, N. J. Another conscience letter from Oxford, Penn., contained $1.50, sent in payment of revenue stamps amounting to that sum, which the writer had found and used.

Chief Engineer JOHN H. LONG has been detached from special service at New-York and ordered to the Saugus.

AMERICAN VESSELS ABANDONED.

The State Department has received a dispatch dated March 9, from the United States Consul at Santanda, Spain, containing information of the wreck and abandonment at sea of the American vessel Lena, Captain WILLIAM BLANCHARD. She was discovered on the 7th of March by the Spanish steamer Auverez in lat. north 46° 52', long east 1° 0' of meridian of San Fernanda. From her logbook it appears that she was bound on a voyage from New-Castle to Callao.

INDIAN APPROPRIATIONS.

The Indian Appropriation bill, as agreed to by the Conference Committees and adopted by both Houses last night, and sent to the President today for his signature, omits all of those amendments moved in the Senate by Mr. HARLAN, based on treaties made by the Indian Peace Commissioners, and contains in their stead the amendment originally proposed by Mr. DAWES in the House, giving the President $2,000,000 to be used for the purpose of keeping peace on the Plains this Summer.

NOMINATIONS CONFIRMED.

The Senate, this afternoon, confirmed the following nominations:

T. M. Wilkins, to be Secretary of the Territory of Dakota; Robert Williams, Jr., Collector, and Geo. W. Scofield, Assessor of Internal Revenue of the Third District of Ohio; Benj. L. Winans, Postmaster at Newport, Ky.; John L. Muller, Postmaster at Lafayette, Ind.; John R. Haynes, Collector of Customs for the District of Texas; Thos. Dixon, Postmaster at Shelby, Ind.; John Ely, Postmaster for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, in place of Mr. Elliott, removed.

NOMINATION NOT CONFIRMED.

It was erroneously stated yesterday that JAMES WADSWORTH was confirmed as Marshal of the Southern District of New-York.

PROCLAMATION BY THE PRESIDENT.

The following proclamation was issued this afternoon by the President:

A Proclamation.

Whereas, Objects of interest to the United States require that the Senate should be convened at 12 o'clock on the 12th day of April, 1869, to receive and act upon such communications as may be laid before it on the part of the Executive. Now, therefore, I, U. S. GRANT, President of the United States, have considered it to be my duty to issue this my proclamation, declaring that an extraordinary occasion requires the Senate of the United States to convene for the transaction of business at the Capitol, in the City of Washington, on the 12th day of April, 1869, at 12 o'clock M. on that day, on which all who shall at that time be entitled to act as members of that body are hereby required to take notice.

Given under my hand and the seal of the United States, at Washington, the 8th of April, in the year of our Lord 1869, and the independence of the United States of America the ninety-third.

(Signed) U. S. GRANT.

By the President.

HAMILTON FISH, Secretary of State.

The extra session is called to act upon nominations to office.

FORTY-FIRST CONGRESS.

FIRST SESSION.

SENATE....WASHINGTON, Friday, April 9.

Mr. ANTHONY was again elected President pro tem. in the absence of Mr. COLFAX.

VIRGINIA, MISSISSIPPI AND TEXAS RECONSTRUCTION.

On motion of Mr. TRUMBULL the House bill authorizing the submission of the Constitution of Virginia, Mississippi and Texas to a vote of the people, was taken up.

Mr. MORTON offered as an additional section the joint resolution offered by him the other day, providing that before Virginia, Mississippi and Texas shall be admitted to a representation in Congress, their several Legislatures shall ratify the Fifteenth Amendment to the Constitution.

Mr. TRUMBULL did not think it wise to add this section to the bill. Congress had already, with great deliberation, passed several acts prescribing the conditions of reconstruction, and several States had complied with those conditions and been admitted to a representation; and for Congress now to impose additional conditions would be a breach of faith with those people. He had no doubt that those States would ratify the Fifteenth Amendment without its being made a condition of reconstruction.

Mr. MORTON denied that it would be a breach of faith. No agreement had been made between Congress and the unreconstructed States. Congress had offered these States reconstruction upon certain conditions, but they had refused to accept the offer and had stood out in hostility to the Government, and now it was the right of Congress to impose whatever conditions it pleased, provided that they were right and just in themselves. He would rather see the pending bill fail than pass without this amendment. The desire of the Democratic Party was to keep the question of negro suffrage open as an element of success in the election of 1872. The Democrats calculated that without the votes of Virginia, Mississippi, Texas and Indiana the Fifteenth Amendment must fail of ratification, and the only way to defeat that result was by making its ratification a condition of the readmission of these States.

Mr. CONKLING said that the imposition of the new condition proposed by the Senator from Indiana (Mr. MORTON) would be a breach of faith. That Senator contended the States in question had usurped authority, and only because they had willfully acted out and refused to accept reconstruction upon the conditions offered by Congress. This certainly was not the case of Virginia. He had voted for that bill with the understanding that Virginia had gone on as far as she could in the work of reconstruction, and had fulfilled the conditions, so far as Congress had prescribed them. Virginia had done all that the Commanding General required, recognizing the Government of Virginia as the proper one to be recognized in all the business of the State, and had adopted a Constitution which was satisfactory to the Commanding General, representing the Government, and which was ratified by the people, for want of money, to hold the election, which was necessary as a condition precedent to her admission to a representation in Congress.

Mr. THURMAN said the power of Congress in relation to changing the Constitution was merely to propose amendments. But the amendment of the Senator from Indiana (Mr. MORTON) proposed that Congress, having already submitted the Fifteenth Constitutional Amendment to the people, should now go on and coerce certain States into ratifying it. This would be an outrage, not only upon the people of those States, but upon the people of all the States, by forcing negro suffrage upon them. Indeed, he understood the Senator to say that one great object of his amendment was to override the will of the people of his State (Indiana.)

Mr. MORTON—Not to override the will of the people, but to override a revolutionary party in Indiana, which seeks to thwart the will of the people.

Mr. THURMAN—If the Senator really believes the people of Indiana are in favor of negro suffrage, why not permit them to submit it to the country, and not attempt to force it upon them by a Legislature elected on the Chicago platform, which expressly disavowed the intention to force negro suffrage on the States in the Union?

After some remarks by Mr. THURMAN, the amendment was agreed to by the following vote:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Anthony, Cameron, Carpenter, Chandler, Cole, Conkling, Harris, Howard, McDonald, Morrill, Morton, Nye, Osborn, Pool, Pratt, Ramsey, Rice, Robertson, Ross, Schurz, Sherman, Stewart, Sumner, Thayer, Tipton, Warner, Williams, Wilson, Yates—29.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Bayard, Bogman, Casserly, Conkling, Davis, Edmunds, Fenton, Ferry, Fessenden, Fowler, McCreery, Norton, Patterson, Sawyer, Sprague, Stockton, Thurman, Trumbull, Willey—20.

Mr. TRUMBULL proposed several verbal amendments designed to remove ambiguities in the original bill. Which were agreed to.

On motion of Mr. EDMUNDS, the sixth section, authorizing the Commanding General to suspend, until the action of the Legislature, all laws that he may deem unjust and oppressive, was struck out.

Mr. EDMUNDS then offered the following as an additional section, which was adopted, declaring "That the proceedings of any of the said States shall not be deemed final, or operate as a complete restoration, until their action shall be approved by Congress."

Mr. DAVIS said, understanding that the people of Virginia, Mississippi, and Texas, were willing to accept the bill as passed by the House, he had not intended to say anything against, although opposed to it, but he could not let that most unconstitutional and outrageous addition to the bill pass, without protesting against it.

Mr. SAWYER offered an amendment to the first section, which was agreed to, striking out the words "the registered voters of said State," and inserting instead the words "voters of said State registered at the time of said submission."

Mr. STOCKTON declared himself opposed to the original bill, and especially opposed to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana, which was not only unconstitutional and an outrage upon the people, but an anomaly even upon the Congressional scheme of reconstruction.

Mr. BAYARD opposed and denounced the bill on the same ground.

Mr. CASSERLY said he would not have opposed the passage of the bill as it had come from the House, because that was simply a compliance with the express recommendation of the President in his late message; but he felt bound to oppose, in the only way he could, the harsh, unjust and uncalled-for amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana. He was glad to see by at least two distinguished Republican Senators for denouncing that amendment as a shameful breach of faith on the part of the Congress of the United States; and from his knowledge of the character of the American people he felt very confident that any party which should attempt to sustain itself by power would, sooner or later, be sternly and effectually rebuked by them.

The bill was then passed by a vote of 44 yeas to 9 nays; all the Senators present voting in the affirmative except the following: Messrs. Bayard, Casserly, Davis, Fowler, McCreery, Norton, Sprague, Stockton and Thurman.

JUDGE-ADVOCATE.

The unfinished business of yesterday, the bill to declare and fix the status of Judge-Advocate of the Army, came up and was amended and passed.

AN EXTRA SESSION CALLED.

The President pro tem. laid before the Senate the President's Proclamation calling an extra session of the Senate, beginning on Monday next, for the transaction of Executive business.

STEAMERS SEIZED DURING THE WAR.

The bill providing for compensating the loyal owners of steamers taken for the use of the Government during the war was taken up and discussed until 4:45, when the Senate went into Executive session.

EVENING SESSION.

THE PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. HOWARD called up the bill to secure the interests of the United States in the Pacific Railroad, and said the Central and Pacific Railroad Companies had come to an agreement as to their point of meeting. He offered a substitute for the first and second sections of the amendment offered by him to the House bill the other day. Agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS complained that there was no Democrat on the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, and said he felt the less delicacy about making the complaint, because he was not himself a Democrat. [Laughter.]

Mr. THERMAN admitted that the complaint was not without cause, and expressed the hope that that cause would be removed at the next session.

Mr. ANTHONY said that formerly the practice in the Senate was for the majority to put their own members to the several Committees, leaving in each a vacancy or vacancies to be filled by the minority, but that at the beginning of war it was found necessary to depart from that practice, and the majority of the Committee on Military Affairs, because the majority felt satisfied that if a vacancy were left on that Committee for one of the minority, it would be filled by the unworthy predecessor (Mr. BRECKINRIDGE) of the present Senator from Kentucky, and it was not thought safe to intrust him with the military secrets of the Government.

Mr. DAVIS criticised the management of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, and intimated that the Chief Engineer of the road, General DODGE, and one of the Directors, Mr. AKSE, were in Congress to secure legislation for the benefit of that road.

Mr. WILSON said the intimation was unjust and unfounded. The fact was, those gentlemen had never voted for any legislation in the interest of the road, and ever since one of them, at least, Mr. AKSE, got into Congress the legislation had been rather adverse to the Company.

Mr. DAVIS disclaimed any prejudice against either of the gentlemen referred to, but he did not think it possible that the Chief Engineer of such an important and extensive work could attend properly to his official duties and at the same time perform his duties faithfully as a Representative. Nor did he think it right that a man who could enter into such an agreement as that read in the Senate the other day by the Senator from Nevada, (STEWART,) should continue in the management of a great national work like the Pacific Railroad.

Mr. HOWARD moved to strike out the first seven lines of section 2, and insert instead his amendment offered when the bill was last up, banning the Union Pacific Railroad Company from continuing to examine the road. Lost.

Mr. WILLIAMS moved to strike out the section offered by Mr. DAVIS, and adopted the other day, directing the Attorney-General to investigate whether the charter of the Union Pacific Railroad Company has not been forfeited, &c. Lost.

Mr. CASSERLY offered an amendment to section 3, which was agreed to.

The bill was then passed in the following form:

Be it resolved, &c., That the stockholders of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, at a meeting to be held on the 2d day of April, 1869, in the City of Boston, with power to adjourn from day to day, shall elect a Board of Directors for the ensuing year, and said stockholders are hereby authorized to establish their general office at such place in the United States as they may select at said meeting, provided that the passage of this resolution shall not confer any other rights on said Union Pacific Railroad Company than to hold such election, or be held in any manner to relinquish or waive any rights of the United States to take advantage of any act or neglect of said Union Pacific Railroad Company heretofore done or omitted whereby the rights of the General Government have been or may be prejudiced; provided that the common terminus of the Union Pacific Railroad and the Central Pacific Railroad shall be at or near Ogden, and the Union Pacific Railroad Company shall pay for and own the railroad from the terminus aforesaid to a promontory summit, at which point the rails shall meet and connect and form one continuous road.

SEC. 2. And be it further resolved, That to ascertain the condition of the Union Pacific Railroad and the Central Pacific Railroad, the President of the United States is hereby authorized to appoint a board of competent citizens, not exceeding five in number, and who shall not be interested in either road, to examine and report upon the condition of the same, and what sum or sums, if any, will be required to put the state much of said roads to the point or terminus, as a first-class road for the entire length thereof, to the said terminus, in conjunction with several roads centering in said node, and the expense of such Board, including an allowance of ten dollars each for their services for each day employed in such examination or report, to be paid equally by said Companies.

SEC. 3. And be it further resolved, That the President is hereby authorized and required to withhold from each of said Companies an amount of subsidy bonds sufficient to be loaned by the United States under said acts, sufficient to secure a full completion as a first-class road of all sections of such road upon which bonds have already been issued by the United States, and to secure the full completion of the same, and in default of obtaining such security as in said section provided, the President shall cause the Attorney-General, or other legal officer of the United States, to bring such suits as may be necessary for the recovery of the money of the United States in such road, and to secure the full completion of the same in the manner provided by law.

SEC. 4. And be it further resolved, That the Attorney-General be requested to institute such proceedings as may be necessary to secure the title of the United States to the Central Pacific Railroad, and the Union Pacific Railroad, and all the branches and all the branches the property and franchises of said roads, and to prosecute such proceedings to a final decree of sale, and to report to Congress for its action the proceedings and decrees in said cases.

Mr. HOWARD moved to suspend the rules, and on this question he called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CONKLING said he was not in the habit of asking for the yeas and nays, but he was now, and he would do so, because he was not willing that the Senate should be put in the attitude of refusing to consider a proposition which was so important to the country as this was. He Needed Changes in the Ministry—Proposed Annexation to the United States—Wholesale Executions in Yucatan.

From Our Own Correspondent.

MEXICO, Thursday, March 18, 1869.

The people are clamoring for a change of Ministry. The following ticket is presented and urged [with vehemence, although JUAREZ cannot decide on removing his companions and compeers, who undoubtedly are very much attached to him if only for the sake of interest. The people desire

JOSE MARIA LAFRAGUA for Minister of Foreign Relations;

IGNACIO L. VALLARTE for Minister of the Interior;

MARIANO YAREZ for Minister of Justice;

MARIANO RIVA PALACIOS for Minister of the Treasury;

General PORFIRIO DIAZ for Minister of War;

BLAS BALCARCEL for Minister of Fomento.

These names are all good, being those of known honest and trustworthy men, especially RIVA PALACIOS and PORFIRIO DIAZ, but JUAREZ is either afraid to change, or else too deeply implicated in the underhand speculations of the Ministers, who, by the way, are fighting among themselves, each trying to get the biggest share of the plunder.

THE PRESIDENT'S BIRTHDAY.

The Two Republics, speaking of the President's birthday, says:

"To-morrow is the sixty-sixth anniversary of the President. JUAREZ has not only an "anniversary," he has a history; and there are none in the "Opposition" who would be so unjust as to withhold from him his justly earned fame. Be their course what it may, his record will stand upon the pages of history, and his services as a patient and enduring patriot in the most trying vicissitudes. The enduring tenacity in the character of BENITO JUAREZ and his example to his countrymen, saved the nation from foreign dominion. Whatever may be the faults of his administration, history will give him an honorable award; and the Ministry alone will reap the opprobium which their countrymen are now heaping upon them."

PROPOSED CENSUS.

Minister ROMERO has issued a circular to the Governors of the different States requesting them to forward all statistical information as to the population of their respective States, so as to fix the rate of taxation.

PROSCRIPTION OF FOREIGNERS.

The Two Republics publishes some very interesting information on matters of importance, and I can do no better than to give them as published by said journal:

"We have seen this fact sticking out in several ways—i. e., the treatment of those who rendered military aid to the Republic, and the Courts permit the money and property of foreigners to be seized under pretext of law and illegally held against all justice. We did not expect, however, to see an authoritative declaration that such is to be the general policy. The Opinion Nacional says that 'the people who were in the Ministerial in Mexico are made to suffer in their persons and interests.' We are sorry to hear such an avowal from such a quarter, and hope soon to hear it controverted."

SALE OF TERRITORY TO THE UNITED STATES.

The same journal says: "Señor FRANCISCO I. RIVERA has expressed through the columns of the Monitor, the idea that the Administration has secured its present power by compromising national interests. This is the opinion we have frequently heard, but never from a source to give it a reliable character. The Opinion, which, by-the-by, is a paper of more spirit and spunk than any daily in this city, takes up the assertion, and to our surprise does not deny it; but simply replies to the inquiring if Señor RIVERA 'did not not serve the Empire.' This is no defence; in fact it will be received as half an admission. If the Opinion believes as we do that the idea is wholly without foundation, why does it not come out and so declare? It is the same as if a man with a cloak proving by faces or even by circumstance the truth of his intimates. Close quarters and a short fight is the way to settle such matters."

PROPOSED ANNEXATION.

In a correspondence from Chihuahua to the Siglo XIX, under date of Feb. 18, a project is spoken of, which is said to exist to annex this Republic to the United States, which project will receive the political aid of General GRANT, who has just taken possession of the Presidency.

"A rumor has been in circulation for some time, vague up to the present, but which disquiets and alarms the public mind.

It is the threatening and imposing roar of a terrible distant tempest which darkens the horizon and agitates the ocean, preceded by a frightful silence, threatening desolation and destruction to whatever may oppose and obstruct its majestic progress.

It is a terrible avalanche of snow melted by the heat of the sun, suspended at an immense height, that threatens to sweep away, destroy and bury the travelers that ascend the mountain.

The inclination of the Government of Mexico towards the neighboring Republic without any other right than that given by the abuse of brute force and preponderance!

The robbery of, and a general assault upon, our nationality!

As you know, it is announced by the New-York, San Francisco and other papers, that this will take place by manifest destiny; that the principal object of ROSECRANS' mission is to prepare the diplomatic ground, and that the Presidency of GRANT will be propitious to carry out that great work, that great crime!

Mexico, being the immediate neighbor of the United States, receiving the winds directly from the North, and breathing them so close by, know better when they come to be impregnated with poisonous miasma, and being in contact with the Americans, we can value such rumors at what they are worth, because we know the idea conceived without being able to specify or describe them; because they exist in the conversations, in words sufficiently significant spoken by some Americans residing here; finally, because, as you are aware, there are certain things which before taking form and life are nothing else than the embryo, the germ whence they spring and are born.

Such is the state of these rumors, and generally it is feared they may bring about a new invasion of our unfortunate country."

WHOLESALE EXECUTIONS IN YUCATAN.

The Revista Universal of Mexico publishes a letter written from Merida, under date of March 17, 1869, which contains some gloomy revelations. Thus, it says:

"Merida is in mourning. The executions which took place on the 5th inst. have produced a profound grief in society. The victims were the most select of the population. CEVALLOS offered to prove the guilt of these unfortunates, relying upon proofs which are said to be more than sufficient. Twenty-one days passed by, and the official Press did not utter a word with respect to this horrible and unjustifiable proceeding. The unhappy victims of the military fury of CEVALLOS were known to all the world by their love of labor, and by the services rendered to the helpless multitude. They never were seen taking part in the continual revolutions which have agitated this unhappy country. GUTIERREZ and BASTRE were distinguished merchants, honored and charitable; ROCA, CICERO, CANTON and ROJANO beardless youth, innocent in every respect; the others honorable citizens, men to be recommended because they supported their families by the sweat of their brow—one of these an eminent writer who lent brilliancy to the literature of Yucatan, and who intermeddled in nothing. What was it that induced Colonel CEVALLOS to bring about such a slaughter?"

El Globo of March 15, under the head of the "Shootings in Yucatan," says:

"These bloody executions are seen in a sorrowful light since what has just taken place in Puebla. It is possible that the merchants that were shot in Merida were more guilty than the insurgents who fraternized on the 18th NOVEMBER; nevertheless, the law of the 8th December could not be strictly applied to the latter. Federal justice interposed itself to avoid it, and the Government itself has held back, knowing that it was going in an evil way. To approve of the action of the Federal authority in Puebla is to sanction it in Yucatan. By what plausible reason can the shootings ordered by CEVALLOS be justified? Here are ten lives among many others for which the Ministry has to answer for; and if they succeed in ridiculing their acts to escape the responsibility before the nation, they can never escape that which they have before their consciences. We would advise the men who direct the policy of the Government, to lend from time to time the voice that rises from the bottom of the lacerated society, and that in the silence of the night, after a day passed in listening to flatteries and stimulations, to continue marching in this road to perdition, that the blood commencing to cool down, they there form an inward stands of the scaffold and compute the lives sacrificed to the policy of the Cervantorio, not in the combats, but in cold-blooded assassinations, in the cross-roads, in those unworthy tricks of justice which has given place to the proverbial manner of speaking, to hacer la fuga and which lowers the dignity of the judiciary to the level of the Mexican Judiciary. After one of these meditations, removed from the temptation and the intoxication of power, those who have exercise it must feel themselves encouraged to continue throughout the system through everything that constitutes it; it is what is the guarantee of the Constitution which the Ministry of Mexico which they defend as invulnerable. It is notorious that ALAMAN and his colleagues of the Cabinet of 1851, in their old age, had frequent moments of carping and melancholy, and those who were near them would then pronounce in a low voice the names of PEDRO DE ROSAINS and of GUERRERO. The shades of these victims would come to take a slow revenge, making their peace of conscience impossible for their evil doings. The men of the Convocatoria have not sacrificed illustrious victims, it is true; but, nevertheless, there will be no lack of bloody phantoms to haunt them in their latter days."

United States of Colombia—Anticipated Trouble in Panama—Ravages of the Small-pox—Ship News.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PANAMA, Thursday, April 1, 1869.

We have no late dates from Bogota, the Spanish steamer not having yet arrived from Carthagena.

We are threatened with more trouble in the State of Panama. Colonel ARISTIDES ORALDIA, said to have been Killed in the Province of Chiriqui, and then dragged over the ground tied to a horse's tail by the troops of General CONROSO, at the last revolt in that Province, is now reported to be alive and well and to be raising men on the Costa Rican frontier of Chiriqui for another war against CONROSO, President of Panama. He has, it is reported, been aided by MANUEL F. DIAZ, Ex-Governor ORALDIA, and other exiles from Panama. CONROSO is now absent from the city, making a tour of the State, but the bad news will cause him to return immediately. The story is that ARISTIDES ORALDIA escaped after the battle near Santiago last year, and that he was personated by his cousin, GALLEGOS, who was really the person who was so barbarously treated.

Small pox, among the blacks principally, continues to rage here. It is said that from ten to twenty die daily of the disease.

The British ship Celestial, from San Francisco for Glasgow, put into this port in distress on the 24th ult., leaking badly. She had on board 380 tons of wheat and 50 tons of manganese, which has been discharged at the island of Flamingo in this harbor.

The United States sloop-of-war Cyane has gone to San Francisco. The gunboat Nipsic has gone from Aspinwall to Havana. The gunboat Gettysburg is at Aspinwall.

The fine British propeller Australia, of the Liverpool, West India and Aspinwall Line, which broke her shaft off Aspinwall, three weeks since, is repaired and nearly ready for sea.

South and Central America—Revolution in Guayaquil—Difficulty Between the Executive and the Judiciary in Peru—The Nicaraguan Canal Project.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PANAMA, Thursday, April 1, 1869.

Our dates from Valparaiso and Santiago de Chili are to the 10th, from Callao and Lima to the 19th, and from Guayaquil, Ecuador, to the 26th of March.

ECUADOR.

Last January, Don GARCIA MORENO, formerly President of the Republic, revolted against President ESPINOSA at Quito, and made himself Dictator. This was effected without bloodshed. On the 19th of March, General VERTEMBILLA, commanding a battalion in Guayaquil, revolted at the head of a party of troops, against the Government of ESPINOSA, and was joined by many of the young men of the city. VERTEMBILLA's success seemed to be complete at first, so sudden was the movement and so unexpected, but he fell, struck on the forehead by a musket shot. His followers then lost courage, and were finally overpowered. The fighting in the streets lasted four hours, and 300 were killed and wounded on both sides. VERTEMBILLA commenced by seizing Gen. DARQUEA, commander-in-chief in Guayaquil, but neglected to secure some of the cuartels, which gave Colonel URIGA an opportunity to oppose him. To the latter is due the defeat of the insurgents. Peace reigned at last dates, but business was completely stagnant on account of the troubles. If recruiting is commenced, it is feared the cacao crop will be entirely lost.

PERU.

The Supreme Court denies the Executive power the right to act upon the questions that have lately arisen as to the jurisdiction of Consuls in the case of crimes committed on board foreign vessels in Peruvian harbors. The matter is under discussion. In the meantime, the Executive decision in favor of the right of the Consuls holds good.

Yellow fever has not yet appeared in Lima and Callao in an epidemic form, but in the south of Peru, particularly in Tacna, its ravages are frightful.

A new iron bridge, to cost $200,000, is to be built over the Rimac at Lima.

CHILI.

On the 4th of March the corner-stone of the proposed new Presbyterian church was laid at Valparaiso. The President of the Republic, the Intendente of the city, the chief officers of the British and United States fleets, and the Consuls of the United States, Great Britain and Prussia were present. The priests grumble at the innovation, of course.

The commercial community of Valparaiso, says the Mail, has been kept in a considerable state of excitement during the past few days, owing to the sudden disappearance of THOMAS C. ARTAGAZA and ANTONIO PARODI. The former was agent and part owner of several coasting steamers, and the latter was the proprietor of several warehouses for the storage of country produce principally. ARTAGAZA is believed to have made good his escape over the Andes, but of the whereabouts of PARODI nothing is positively known. Fiats in bankruptcy have been issued against both parties, and the defalcations are estimated to exceed $200,000. The affairs of both parties are in an inextricable state of confusion, which the fraudulent disposal of merchandise, of which the warrants have been sold by the original proprietors to third parties, has contributed to augment in no inconsiderable degree. It is expected that a further investigation into this disputable affair will disclose some rather curious facts.

The United States war vessels Nyanh, Kearsarge and Pushatuck were at Valparaiso on the 10th of March; also, the French war vessels Mighre, Byerse and Sybille, and the British war vessels Topaz and Charybdis.

GENERAL AMERICAN COUNTRIES.

The Panama Railroad Company's steamer Costa Rica, reached Panama from Central American ports on the 30th ultimo. The only item worth transcribing is that about the proposed ship canal across Nicaragua. It says that Congress has ratified the contract between M. CHEVALIER and the Nicaraguan Minister for excavating a canal across Nicaragua. This has drawn forth a spirited protest from Mr. FELIX BELLY, who some years ago obtained a concession for making a canal, and whose concession is held to be valid by the French law Courts, as shown in a recent trial. Nicaraguans are very sanguine about this canal, and fully believe that M. CHEVALIER, backed by the French Emperor, will be able to carry out his contract, but those who look upon the canal across the American continent with an imperial eye, must see that great as may be the difficulties in Darien in carrying out this grand project, they are threefold greater in Nicaragua, where the distance between the two oceans is so very much larger, and where neither the river San Juan nor the Lake of Granada offer those facilities which projectors at one time thought they did.

POLITICAL.—Mr. P. W. ADAMS has accepted the Democratic nomination for Congress in the 6th District of Georgia. He says:

"In common with all the opponents of despotism, religious, commercial, constitutional and despotism, I shall continue to oppose the Republican party so long as it adheres to the principles which the last Presidential campaign made the issue of the day. Issues will be introduced into every campaign, and the issue of the next campaign will be, shall the new party be permitted to impose its will upon the people of this Union, or shall the people make to pay their taxes? Taxes must be collected, and the new party must be put down or Federal rule must be abolished, and the people of this Union made to pay taxes.

[illegible] "and it is entirely argued that the sale of the property in question was in violation of this provision and that it should be set aside as not done for the benefit of the creditors of the property. This is a far-reached principle, since whose property has been recovered, saved or rescued from the hands of a dangerous state, may be called a step to the right direction. Yet, that the opposition that by parting with his title he actually saved, saved, or rescued, or was the very thing transferred, certainly involves a reasonable presumption of constructive fraud. The instrument, however, as set forth already by the skill of the draftsman, that it stands in fact but little more than a strained and over-liberal reading of the deed, to infer from the dexterity evinced in its numerous and far-seeing clauses, as well as from the character of the conditions so frequently embodied in the contracts of our modern corporations, it may fairly be assumed, that if the sentence in question had been intended to effect what is thus claimed for it, nothing would have been left to implication, but we should have found a clear, explicit provision, double-lined, in plainer language than type, to the effect that case of the sale which the law of the land treats as the acceptance of an abandonment shall be considered in such. If any error has been committed, it was in submitting the question to the jury, for the learned Judge might well have ruled, as a matter of law, that the acquittance had been fully made out. In the respect the charge was more favorable to the defendants than they were entitled to have it, and the jury having found the fact against them, they are wholly without ground of complaint. No other point having been raised, and none of the numerous exceptions taken at the case having been argued, the judgment should be affirmed.

COURT OF GENERAL SESSIONS.

Before Recorder Hackett.

THE MORAN CASE.

John Moran is the special deputy accused of aiding the escape of George King, who stole $200,000 worth of bonds from Cambreleng & Fyne. King, though a young man, was an old offender. He had restored $150,000 of the bonds, but he retained the rest, with the cool determination to pay himself for his five years in State's Prison. Then he eluded or seduced Moran, who was taking him from the Tombs to Sing Sing, escaped from custody, and has not yet been arrested.

Moran's counsel are John H. Anthon, William Kintzing, and Charles Spencer. They commenced by challenging the jurors. Thirteen had already formed opinions concerning the guilt of the prisoner, fourteen were challenged peremptorily, two were unassailable by reason of Deputy-District-Attorney Jones's consent, and the panel was exhausted after seven men had been sworn in. The District-Attorney was ordered to fill a new panel by 9 o'clock. Mr. Anthon said that this trial concerned the Sheriff of the county; he hence it would necessitate an inquiry into the conduct of his office; that the Sheriff was, therefore, not a competent person to draw the panel, and he accordingly moved that the Recorder for a new panel be so made that it should be drawn and summoned by the Coroner. Mr. Anthon stated that the Sheriff had told him that he had drawn the panel he should challenge the array. The Recorder denied the motion of Mr. Anthon, and exception was taken to the denial. Mr. Anthon then objected to the qualification of the jurors, which had been completed on Monday. The Recorder said that it was within his ministerial power to allow the jury to separate, and he should permit it. Mr. Anthon objected to that, the objection was overruled, exception taken, and the jury then sworn. The new panel was made returnable on Monday at 10 o'clock, and the Court was adjourned to that time.

SERMAN COUNTY FRAUD CASE.

The District-Attorney yesterday commenced suit to recover the bonds of Jeremiah Simmons, Andrew Wilman and Michael Hollicher, each of whom is liable for $5,000. Colonel Herman Hunsell has not been heard from for a long time.

POLICE COURTS.

The Tombs—Shandley, Justice.

ASSAULTING AN OFFICER.

Officer James Tobey, of the Twenty-seventh Precinct, arrested Thos. Egan on a charge of disorderly conduct, and while he was proceeding to the station-house with his prisoner he was suddenly assaulted by Egan, who drew a slung-shot from his pocket for that purpose. Fortunately the attempt was discovered in time to prevent any serious injury being done. When Egan was arraigned before the Court he was fully committed for trial without bail.

ALLEGED FORGER.

Chas. Pell, a native of England, was arraigned before Magistrate Shandley yesterday on a charge of having forged a number of Bills of Exchange on Baring Brothers & Co. in favor of Philip Kent, and Joseph Mignonte, of Eighty-eighth-street, made the complaint, and stated that his brother Edward has been arrested, convicted and sentenced to Sing Sing Prison on a charge of forging checks, and he professed to have evidence to show that Pell had forged the checks. Pell was remanded for examination.

POLICE TRIALS.

Before Commissioner Manierre.

At trials of policemen, yesterday, before Commissioner MANIERRE, twenty men appeared to answer complaints. There were no charges preferred by citizens, nor any cases of much public interest. Two officers, recent appointments, Joseph Delany of the 14th and John Smith of the 26th Precincts, both of whom were charged with intoxication, Sergeant Townsend found Delany on his post, leaning against a stoop, his face pale, his eyes dull and glassy, and his mouth open. In both cases the surgeon of police swore positively as to the condition of the accused. They were referred to the Board for dismissal.

COURT OF SESSIONS—BROOKLYN.

Before Judge Troy.

ASSAULTING A POLICEMAN.

Edward Panel, convicted of having assaulted an Officer of the Forty-fifth Precinct, while in the discharge of his duty, was sentenced to pay a fine of $50 and to be imprisoned in the Flatbush Penitentiary for sixty days.

BURGLARS SENTENCED.

Charles Bloom, indicted for a burglary committed in Williamsburg on the 4th of January last, was tried and convicted. He was subsequently sentenced to the Penitentiary for five years.

George Hogan, who pleaded guilty to the same burglary in which Bloom was engaged, was sentenced to four years in the Penitentiary.

CORONERS' COURT—BROOKLYN.

Before Coroner Jones.

HOW MRS. WALL CAME TO MRS. DEATH.

Coroner JONES held an inquest yesterday on the body of Mary E. Wall, who died at the Long Island College Hospital on Thursday night, from the injuries resulting from the explosion of a kerosene lamp. It may be remembered that the husband of deceased was charged with committing a violent assault upon her. It appears from the evidence on the inquest that Michael Wall is a laborer, residing at Hicks-street, and that he came home with his work at 6 o'clock, and expected his supper; that wife and he having had some misunderstanding previously, she was in bad temper, and he not desiring to have any trouble, went to the cellar to get the coal; that she got ahead of him, caught it first, and threw it at him; that she then took the lid of the stove, and followed up the assault by throwing the lamp at him; that the lamp fell on the floor and exploded, setting fire to her clothing; that Wall embraced her so as to prevent the flames making progress to the upper part of her body, but she broke from him and ran out; that John Galvin succeeded in covering her with something, but she had to be knocked down before she could be relied up in the covering to avert her complete burning; that in her ante-mortem statement she said the was to blame for the accident and not her husband.

On this statement of facts, the jury rendered a verdict to the effect that deceased came to her death from the accidental explosion of a lamp, and exonerated her husband from all blame. Whereupon Wall was discharged from custody.

Deceased was 37 years of age, Irish, and leaves a family of small children.

FRIDAY, April 9, P. M.

The demand for Money was again active today, and Gold Interest, equal to 10 ⅌ cent. per annum in Currency, was generally paid on the street, with exceptions equal to 12@14 ⅌ cent. per annum. There was a good supply of balances offered for temporary employment, but most of the lenders demanded the extra rates of Interest just quoted. At the close of bank hours 7 ⅌ cent. Gold Interest was the current quotation.

The Gold Room was buoyant in the Bull interest, and a further advance of one per cent. was made on the last sales of yesterday, the highest figures being 132¼@132¾ ⅌ cent. It transpires that the failure of yesterday by one of the Bear operators in the Room involved, in one way or another, about two millions of dollars in contracts, and the disappointments and complications thus unexpectedly created undoubtedly influenced, in a material measure, the advance in price to-day, although other causes of a political nature were spoken of on the Street, again founded on the troubles in Cuba.

The advance in Gold and its scarcity for delivery caused another dull market for Foreign Exchange, although this is a steamer day. The actual sales, 60 days on London, were not better than 107¾@108 ⅌ cent., with exceptions at 107¼ ⅌ cent. for Bankers' bills. Short Sight Bills are quoted 108¼@108¾ ⅌ cent.

The Treasury Office took in $467,000 in Gold for Customs to-day, and paid out only $25,000 for Gold Interest.

The Public Funds advanced to 120 ⅌ cent. for the 5-20s of 1862, and to 114 ⅌ cent. for the 1867s; the other Gold-bearing Bonds rating 117 ⅌ cent. for the 1868s, May and November Interest; 115 ⅌ cent. for the 1864s, and 105¾@5/8 for the 5 ⅌ cents 10-40s. The State Bonds advanced to 68 for the old Tennessees, being a difference of 2 ⅌ cent. against the new Bonds, which are selling at 65 ⅌ cent. Virginia and North Carolina were steady.

With the exception of New-York Central, the Railway speculation was generally upward, and the Bullish feeling in the market in the face of dear Money is significant of still greater confidence as we approach the Summer months, when both Currency and Country Bank balances usually accumulate in New-York for employment at low rates of Interest. The exception in the case of New-York Central is ascribed to the manipulations of the Albany Lobby on the Bill sanctioning the recent Scrip Dividend of the Company, and Street gossip runs to the effect that sundry Hitches are to occur before the Bill, which is reasonably sure to pass into law, finally gets through both Houses, and receives the sanction of the Governor. The Stock of the Hudson River Road advanced to 150 ⅌ cent. this morning, ex-dividend, but subsequently fell back to 147@145¾ ⅌ cent. The extreme rise since last week on the price, before the dividend, is equal to 10@12 ⅌ cent. Harlem Stock is also higher, and the Western Roads were nearly all active and prices strongly upward, the St. Paul's, Wabash and the Northwests being especially buoyant. The Miscellaneous list was higher on Pacific Mail, in which the speculation continues active, and firm on Western Telegraph and Mariposa Preferred.

The Mark Lane Express, of March 29, says:

"The weather has again been cold and seasonable, allowing the farming stock of all kinds more especially on the drier soils, and a large extent of Spring corn has been successfully planted. We cannot, however, speak of the crops favorable way as to the coming crops, the wheat in many districts looking very poorly, giving but little promise; the long prevalence of wet and the rank growth produced by the mildness of the winter portion of the Winter now exhibiting their effects. Indeed, it already seems probable enough that the chance of an equal crop to 1868 is remote if not impossible. The color of the plants generally has altered, and the heavy rains have exhibited it turned to yellow; while the fog has been so much reduced that where the crop was so thick on the ground that the latter was obscured, it is now plainly visible, some farmers look upon it as advantageous, others give up the hope of abundance, and however seasonable the Summer may be, it seems unlikely that it can make up for the untimely warmth and wet of the early part of the Winter, and as a whole, the cold of March has been most serviceable, for without much severity it has effectually changed the downwardness of vegetation, and in like proportion gives the prospect of an average gathering of Spring corn, if the Wheat crop is most in jeopardy. The great depression of last week has given place to greater confidence, more especially in the Metropolis, where there has been frequently an advance of in ⅌ qr., and in some instances, although the improvement in London has been doubtful. Mark Lane, however, cannot fail to follow suit if there should be several consecutive days of Monday's weather, which was the smallest since harvest. In France, too, matters have mended. Paris was rising fast, but finally received a partial check, though in the country the majority of the markets were 1f. 1s. ⅌ qr. higher. Belgium shows some improvement, as well as parts of Germany, including Danzig; and Spring Wheat in New-York has rather hardened, but not Flour. Communications on supplies, we think, are likely to see all through the season, but a much higher range seems unlikely without some positive disaster. The arrivals of the week since the 19th of March were 4,000 quarters of which four cargoes were Wheat, four Maize, and three Barley."

Internal Revenue Decisions.

UNITED STATES INTERNAL REVENUE, ASSESSOR'S OFFICE, 2D DISTRICT, DIVISION OF NEW-YORK, OFFICE NO. 106 LEONARD-STREET, NEW-YORK CITY, Dec. 14, 1868.

By section 75 of the last compilation, in case of the removal of any person or persons from the house or premises for which any trade, business or profession was taxed, it is made lawful for the person or persons so removing to any other place to carry on the trade, business or profession specified in the tax receipt at the place to which such person or persons may remove, without payment of any additional tax, and then the law provides in the same section how the change shall be registered. The act of July 20, 1868, leaves this law unrepealed, so that manufacturers of tobacco and cigars may make such removal without payment of additional specific tax, by registering the change according to law and regulations. The law and instructions so far in such cases are not specific as to the bonds, duplicate statements, Collector's certificates, inventories and taxes on manufactured tobacco and cigars accompanying such removal. In this district the removal in that respect has been uniformly treated as the termination of the business at the place for which it was specially taxed, and the commencement of a new business of like description at the place to which the parties have removed. They have been accordingly required to provide new bonds, duplicate statements, procure new Collector's certificates, file inventories for both places, as concluding business at one place and commencing at the other, and pay the tax for the manufacturer of tobacco and cigars which they take with them to their new place, as removed from the place of manufactury. This practice is held to be correct by law, and probably could not be sustained, particularly in the case of taxing the removed goods, in which case there is a very serious doubt whether there is a removal from the place of manufacture, or whether the place of manufacture is changed to the new location. The question whether the sale of a dealer, when he sells out in bulk and goes out of business, and makes the sale for that purpose, should be taxed as a dealer's sale and included in his other sales, is congeneric with the foregoing inquiries, and may, with propriety, be settled in the same connection. Such a sale would seem to be wholly beyond the intent of the law, "occasional sale," and would not constitute one a dealer, and liable to special tax as such, if it had been the only sale made. From questions that have been referred to me by the Department, and from other claims for refunding, I have concluded the proper practice to be to include and assess such a sale, but many dealers entertain the other view. These cases are of frequent occurrence, and the questions should be relieved from doubt by the Department as an early day.

Very respectfully,
PIERRE C. VAN WYCK, Assessor.

Hon. E. A. ROLLINS, Commissioner Internal Revenue, Washington, D. C.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
WASHINGTON, April 7, 1869.

I have received your letter of the 16th of December, informing me of your practice with regard to manufacturers of tobacco and cigars who remove from one house, or from the premises where they have paid special tax, to carry on the business of manufacturing to other premises. You state that in your district such removal has uniformly been treated as the termination of the business at the place for which it was specially taxed and the commencement of a new business of like description at the place to which the parties have removed, and that you have accordingly required them to give new bonds, furnish new duplicate statements, procure new collectors' certificates, file inventories for both places, as concluding business at one place and commencing at the other, and pay the tax on the manufactured tobacco and cigars which they take with them to their new places, as removed from the place of manufacture. As this practice is not to be objected to, pointed out by law, you inquire if it has the sanction of this office. In reply, I have to say, that by the sixty-third section of the act of July 20, 1868, every manufacturer of tobacco or snuff is required without previous demand to furnish to the Assistant Assessor of the district, where the manufacture is to be carried on, a sworn statement, &c. This statement is required and is not to be dispensed with in any case. The statement is for the use of the officer of the district where the business is carried on. A statement made in some other district at some other place cannot be accepted as a compliance with the requirements of the law. The statement is made the basis on which the penal sum of the bond is determined, and therefore the statement must be made before the bond is given. Removals of business. Removals are not limited to collection districts. Manufacturers frequently remove from one district to another, and often from one State to another. The business is carried on in another locality or upon other premises, and if a special tax has already been paid and the manufacturer holds a receipt for the same, he will not be required to pay additional special tax unless additional liability is incurred by the addition of other articles, persons, or sales of those formerly employed.

Bonds, duplicate statements, inventories may be required from time to time, at new bonds even required upon over the Collector is of opinion that the safety of the revenue requires it, under such cautions from the Commissioner. Bonds not to be required to be changed, or to be supplanted, and where once taken, not to be changed, or to be supplanted, and where once taken, not to be changed, or to be supplanted, and where once taken, not to be changed, or to be supplanted, and where once taken, not to be changed, or to be supplanted, and where once taken, not to be changed, or to be supplanted, and where once taken, not to be changed, or to be supplanted, and where once taken, not

NEWS OF THE DAY.

EUROPE.

The Spanish Government has resolved to send a Naval Commission to New-York to purchase some monitors. The proposition to establish a Triumvirate has been abandoned, as it was believed that such a change in the form of Government at present would involve the country in serious financial difficulties.

In the House of Commons last night Mr. BRUCE, the Home Secretary, in answer to a question, said that the Ministry was preparing a bill in accordance with the suggestion of the Royal Commission, which should alienate British subjects who swore allegiance to other Governments. Earl GRANVILLE announced in the House of Lords that the Hudson Bay Company is ready to cede to the Government its possessions in British North America. The bill to create life peerages was read for the first time.

CUBA.

Two political prisoners were garroted at Havana yesterday in presence of a large concourse of spectators. Great excitement prevailed, and seditious cries were uttered by the crowd. The volunteers who were guarding the prisoners fired twenty shots in the crowd, killing six men and wounding others.

CONGRESS.

Mr. ANTHONY was yesterday chosen President of the Senate pro tem. in the absence of Vice-President COLFAX. The House bill relative to the admission of the States of Mississippi, Virginia and Texas was taken up. The bill provides that the Constitutions of those States, as adopted by the Constitutional Conventions, shall be again submitted to the people. Mr. BINGHAM offered an additional section, providing that the Legislatures of those States shall ratify the Fifteenth Amendment before the States shall be admitted to representation in Congress. The amendment was debated at considerable length, after which it was agreed to—yeas 80, nays 70. After some further discussion the bill was passed—yeas 15, nays 5. The Executive Proclamation, convening an extra session of the Senate on Monday for the transaction of Executive business, was presented. The Senate then went into Executive session, and soon after adjourned. At the evening session debate was resumed upon the bill to secure the interests of the Government in the Pacific Railroads, and it was finally passed. The Senate adjourned.

In the House the Senate amendments to the Whiskey and Tobacco bill were non-concurred in, and a Conference Committee asked for. The Judiciary Committee reported a bill providing for the printing of the opinions of Attorney-Generals, which was passed. Messrs. SPRONG, KELLOGG and STARKWEATHER, Representatives elect from Connecticut, were sworn in. A lengthy debate ensued upon the report of the Committee on Elections relative to the Pennsylvania contested election case. The majority report, which declares that Mr. MYERS, and not Mr. MOWRATT, is entitled to the seat, was adopted. The report of the Conference Committee on the Deficiency bill was presented and agreed to. A resolution was adopted to pay Mr. MOWRATT $1,000 for expenses incurred in contesting the seat which had just been accorded to Mr. MYERS. Mr. WHITTEMORE introduced a bill to relieve a large number of persons from political disabilities, and moved a suspension of the rules that the bill might be acted upon, but this was refused—yeas 95, nays 92. After some debate the previous question was seconded, but no vote was taken on the bill. The House then adjourned. At the evening session the Senate bill to facilitate the payment of soldiers' bounties to themselves or their heirs, was passed. Debate was resumed on the bill removing political disabilities from a large number of persons, which was finally passed. The Senate amendment to the Virginia, Mississippi and Texas Reconstruction bill was agreed to after a brief debate. Some other miscellaneous business was transacted, and the House adjourned.

GENERAL.

By the arrival at this port of the steamship Rising Star we are in receipt of late news from Central and South America. New revolutionary disturbances were looked for in the State of Panama, but all was quiet after the steamer sailed. Advices from Ecuador, Peru, Chili and the Central American countries indicate general tranquillity.

The freight railroad tracks in Bond-street, Philadelphia, are to be taken up at once. Some time since the City Council passed an ordinance requiring the tracks to be removed immediately, but at the request of the merchants consented that they might remain till the crops had been brought to market. Taking advantage of this postponement, the merchants applied to the Legislature to override the action of the Council. So yesterday the Council again reconsidered its action, and ordered the track to be immediately taken up.

The bank authorities in Montreal having learned that a gang of robbers intended making an assault upon some bank vaults, have telegraphed the fact throughout the Dominion, and advised double guards to be placed in all banks at night.

JOSEPH DION, the billiard champion, declines to accept any more challenges, his private business requiring his whole attention.

A small-boat containing two men, named WILLIAM BROOK and PHILIP HELMER, capsized off Turkey Point, Canada, on Thursday, and both men were drowned.

In consequence of the rain on Thursday morning, the promised speech of Ex-President JOHNSON, at Nashville, was postponed until Saturday.

The propeller Thomas, which sailed from New-York for Galveston with an assorted cargo, on the 4th inst., took fire on the 6th, when off Hatteras, and burned to the water's edge. The hull sank four hours after the fire was discovered. Five of the crew are missing, and are supposed to be lost. The remainder of the crew and four passengers arrived at Norfolk, Va., yesterday.

RAYMOND TRAFFORD, a New-York thief, was arrested in Albany for burglary yesterday, and committed to jail.

The steamboat General Grant was burned at her dock in New-Orleans on Thursday night. The Captain, who was part owner, distracted at his loss, attempted to commit suicide by leaping into the flames. The steamboat was partially insured in Northern companies.

The latest advices from the Nevada gold mines, which were reported in our edition of yesterday as being on fire, represent that up to midnight of Thursday the fires had not been extinguished. Twenty-eight bodies of workmen had been taken out up to that time. It is believed that at least forty persons perished by the calamity.

On complaint of a clergyman at Honolulu, Sandwich Islands, one of the natives has been fined $25 and costs for cruelty to his horse.

An army order, issued by General GRANT, has been brought to light in Richmond, which forbids military commanders appointing to civil offices persons who had been previously removed by themselves or their predecessors. This will prevent General WEBB reappointing Mayor BURGESS, of Petersburg, who was removed by General STONEMAN.

The steamship America, which arrived at Savannah on Thursday, reports that when off Cape Henry two large whales were discovered, one of which rose under the bow, shaking the steamship and breaking seven feet off the stem, shivering it so badly that it had to be cut off and repaired. The whale came to the surface on the port bow and sunk out of sight.

An earthquake shock was felt at Vienna, Canada, yesterday, between 8 and 9 o'clock A. M. It lasted twenty seconds, but did no damage.

WILLIAM SCOTT, the nephew of Sir WALTER SCOTT, who has been for some time back a sick inmate of the St. Andrew's Home in Montreal, died in that institution on Tuesday evening, from cancer in the stomach. He was 64 years of age.

Cotton was in better supply and lower yesterday; demand less urgent. Flour, wheat, corn and sugars were in better request and firmer. Petroleum and spirits turpentine quiet. Strained rosin fairly active at full rates. The auction sales of dry goods were more numerous, attractive and successful, the general bidding for desirable fabrics having been fair. In the line of family market there was more activity; eggs were decidedly higher; meats and fish not changed in price remarkably; vegetables in fuller assortment. Ocean freights were very dull.

How to Promote the Prosperity of the South.

WENDELL PHILLIPS is a man of ideas, and many of his ideas are sound and sensible. But he is also a man of intense prejudices and undying resentments, and these are always unreasonable and unwise. He says:

"Laws are nothing but rails. Congress can only open doors and offer opportunities. Laws do not make States. Congress moulds, but does not create civilization. That is the creature of other forces. We must woo those great forces to our side before we can even hope for success in reconstructing the South."

This is true and wise. It expresses a fundamental truth of political philosophy,—one which has been very generally ignored, and that, too, by the political school to which Mr. PHILLIPS belongs. If they had been content to leave the regeneration of the South to those "great forces," by which alone the growth of States and the progress of the world is carried forward, and had trusted less to political schemes and been less eager to force everything into proper shape by law, they would have accomplished much more than has yet been done toward the attainment of that object.

"Laws are nothing but rails," says Mr. PHILLIPS, and this to a certain extent is true. Laws fix the channels within which and upon which the active, vital forces of society are to exert their power. But these forces must also belong to the society itself; they must be the forces of the people themselves whose development they are to accomplish,—they cannot be alien to them, and imposed upon them from without. And even the laws which are to guide the action of these creative forces, must be themselves the expression of the will and sentiment of the people also. In fact, upon the theory of government on which all our institutions rest, the people to be governed must be themselves the authors and origin of everything which relates to their government; and every departure from this fundamental and essential principle retards their growth rather than aids it, and is a hindrance rather than a help to that progress and improvement of society which all government is designed to accomplish.

We have been very slow, it seems to us, in recognizing this principle in our practical dealings with the South since the suppression of the rebellion. It has been assumed in all our action that the people of the Southern States were excluded from the application of it by their rebellion,—that they had forfeited the right to govern themselves in their local affairs, because they had rebelled against an authority in national affairs. We ignored in this, our fundamental principle, that self government is the only rightful government, for anybody and for everybody, and that a people will themselves reform whatever is wrong in their government more surely and more speedily than anybody else can do it for them. We assumed that the people of the Southern States, after the surrender of their armies, must be governed absolutely and in all things by Congress,—that they must make no Constitutions or laws, elect no officers and do nothing toward reorganizing their institutions, or even laying the "rails" on which their social forces were to operate, except with our assent and at our dictation. And one result of all this is, that the work is not done yet. We found it comparatively easy to lead the Southern horse to the water;—but we have found it very difficult to make him drink. In all this we think we made a great mistake, which we should be glad to see avoided, as much as possible, hereafter.

Mr. PHILLIPS thinks that the great necessity is to repress crime and disorder, and this has been the excuse,—perhaps we ought to say the reason,—for all that has been done in our legislation concerning the South, since the close of the war. "Crime and disorder" certainly should be repressed; that is the first essential of all social peace and growth. But we are inclined to think, (1,) that it would have been more effectually done if we had trusted the people of the South more to do it for themselves from the beginning; (2,) that relatively crime and disorder have not been so much more prevalent at the South than at the North, since the war, as has been represented; (3,) that they have been due in both sections to substantially the same causes, and must be cured by substantially the same means; and, (4,) that a great deal of the work of repression by which we have endeavored to cure them, has had precisely the opposite effect, and will continue to have that effect so long as we continue it. Mr. PHILLIPS calls upon General GRANT to stop this "anarchy and bloodshed" in the South. So do we—so does the nation. But how? By the policy of PETER the Great, says Mr. PHILLIPS—"stern as fate, inexorable as death." By throwing to the winds every impulse of humanity, every sentiment of Christianity, every principle of self-government, on which alone our institutions rest, and by reverting to the instincts and practices of the most savage of rulers in the most savage of times! By allowing the people themselves, says General GRANT, to resume the control of their own affairs, whenever they are ready to become "peaceful and orderly communities."

We prefer General GRANT's policy to that of Mr. PHILLIPS.

Our Legation in Spain.

Hon. JOHN P. HALE, our Minister at Madrid, some time since wrote a letter to a New-Hampshire Member of Congress, begging him to secure his retention in office,—not mainly because he wanted the office, but because he wanted to triumph over Mr. H. J. PERRY, his Secretary of Legation, and Secretary SEWARD, both of whom had proved themselves, officially and personally, his enemies. The letter was forthwith published. Mr. FOGG, formerly our Minister in Switzerland, and more recently United States Senator from New-Hampshire, feeling the honor of his State involved in Mr. HALE's person, forthwith rushed to the rescue,—and wrote another letter, echoing his requests for retention, and repeating his slanders on Messrs. PERRY and SEWARD, which was also forthwith given to the public.

The quarrel between HALE and PERRY, however, is of somewhat ancient date, and the State Department at Washington abounds in documents touching its origin, progress and leading features. Some of these papers have been published, and will be carefully perused, we trust, by Mr. FOGG and the other New-Hampshire gentlemen who consider Mr. HALE's personal and official honor identical with that of their common State. After they have given the subject a careful study we shall be glad to hear from them further as to what they think about it.

It seems that as long ago as in the Spring of 1867 the Spanish Government made formal complaint, through our Secretary of Legation, that our Minister, Mr. HALE, had been in the habit of smuggling goods into Spain under cover of his diplomatic privilege, for the profit and advantage of a Spanish commercial house, and of receiving regular payment at the hands of that house for the taxes of which the Government was thus defrauded. Full proofs of these transactions were at the same time furnished, and it was shown that Mr. HALE had bent, with the commercial house concerned, a regular account current of the profit and loss of this disgraceful traffic. In consequence of the desire of the Spanish Government not to give a useless notoriety to the transaction, our Secretary, Mr. PERRY, contented himself with reporting the matter in due course to the Government at Washington, and with informing Mr. HALE of the action taken by the Spanish authorities. Mr. HALE, on the contrary, seems to have thereupon commenced that personal warfare upon Mr. PERRY and his family which he has continued with so much asperity down to the present time,—one of his most recent official communications being a description of the personal appearance, age, dress and general demeanor of Mrs. PERRY. Why he was left in office by Secretary SEWARD for so long a time after his official misconduct had been officially brought to the notice of our Government, we find it difficult to understand. He returned this forbearance, as might have been expected, by the coarsest and most mendacious abuse of the official from whom he had received it.

We see it stated that the dispute is to be settled by the removal of both Mr. HALE and Mr. PERRY. We fail to see either justice or good sense in such a disposition of the case. If both parties were equally in fault, or if both being in fault it were difficult to decide which had been most to blame, the case would bear a different aspect. But it is not so. Mr. HALE is shown to have degraded his official position, insulted the country to which he is accredited and disgraced the nation he represents, by carrying on the business of a smuggler under cover of his diplomatic character. A grosser or less excusable offence it is not easy to imagine. Mr. PERRY has been guilty of nothing,—is not even accused of anything,—and is universally conceded to have performed the duties of his office with ability, dignity and success. He has had the entire respect at all times of the Government to which he is accredited, and of the people among whom he lives. We see no reason why he should be removed from office, or why he should receive anything but approval and applause at the hands of the Government he has served.

The Elections and the Administration.

The result of the recent elections, especially in Connecticut, are gratifying indications of the hold of the Administration upon the confidence of the country. It shows that the people have full faith in the honesty of purpose,—the soundness of judgment and the devotion to the public good which will preside over the conduct of the Government under General GRANT. And it shows, also, their determination that his Administration shall have a full and fair trial, and be judged on its merits, and not on the hasty clamor of disappointed politicians, before it has had time to develop its policy or show the character of its acts. An effort thus to discredit it in advance was made the moment the Cabinet was announced, and it has been repeated, with fresh vigor, at every opportunity since. The Connecticut election, it was confidently predicted, would give the first of the series of throws under which it was certain to fall. The result has falsified all these predictions. The original selection of the Cabinet, as well as each succeeding development of policy, has evinced General GRANT's purpose to pursue what he deems the desirable ends of administration by the means which he deems best calculated to attain them, in comparative disregard of the fixed channels of party management, and of the dictation of party leaders. And the elections show that in so doing he will be sustained by the people. Whatever there is out of the common way in his course, commends it all the more to their approval. The first elections after the advent of a new Administration are always important, as showing the drift of the popular current; those already held are eminently satisfactory in this respect.

Politics and Prayer—The Chaplain on the Scamp.

Political preaching is bad enough. To be required to listen to partisan tirades from pulpits and platforms erected for purposes of religious instruction, has always seemed a vile perversion of privilege and power. There may have been excuses for JOHN KNOX preaching at authority in days when free discussion was unknown; but for ministers of the Gospel who obtrude politics upon their congregations in a country which suffers from an excess of political gabble, there is no defence. Patience has few severer trials than the listening to stump speeches as a substitute for sermons.

Bad as political preaching is, however, political praying is worse. It is more than a nuisance: it is a mockery of forms which, in their place, inspire reverence—a paraphrasing of sacred things which tends to bring extemporaneous prayer into contempt, and to taint with an odor of false pretences the garments of the irreverend gentlemen by whom it is cultivated. We can understand, although we dislike, the man who, under the guise of preaching from a scriptural text, inflicts upon us a discourse about Congress or the Democratic Party. He degrades his office, and for the time places himself on a level with demagogues; but at least the performance is intelligible, and, perhaps, honest. With praying the case is different. The person engaged in it assumes the attitude and air of one addressing the Divine Being. He is supposed to kneel on holy ground, and his supplications—according to the orthodox theory of prayer—have no more relation to the politics of the day than to the price of butter or the excellence of eggs. The chaplains of legislative bodies appear to cherish a different idea of their duty. They have nearly succeeded in persuading themselves that they are a sort of ex officio members of the bodies that go through the pretence of listening to their prayers. Appointed to pray, they choose to talk. They make impertinent speeches instead of fitting solemn prayers, and proceed altogether on the hypothesis that the form of supplication is only a thin disguise for humbuggery.

For several years the Senate was accustomed to listen to the Chaplain's entreaties for the suppression of rebellion. The Almighty was appealed to, to sustain the Government and to frustrate the designs of all in arms against it. Now another Chaplain prays at the Senate in behalf of rebels. He calls for blessings on what his predecessor cursed. He urges as righteous a method of opposition which other place gentlemen, hoeing in the same place, described as damnable. Forgetting the injunction by which one's conduct to others should be regulated, he asks that the evils from which we ought to be delivered may fall with unmitigated fury upon the "isles of the sea" and the nations governing them. It is a perversion of language to style this city-gammon prayer, or to class this Chaplain in the category of religious teachers. We advise him to leave the Senate to its sins, and to start for Cuba as Chaplain to the next batch of filibusters that reach its hospitable shores. What he is not ashamed to pray for he should not be afraid to fight for, and we are sure the Senate will survive his departure.

The Rev. Mr. BELDING, who ministers to the spiritual cravings of the New-York Assembly, has given another turn to the farce. He has undertaken to pray down the lobby. Why divine intervention should be invoked to do what the members of the Assembly are themselves able to accomplish, we cannot imagine. Something might be said in favor of praying for the members, as a gathering of hardened sinners. There would be a certain appositeness in a lecture intended so to alarm their slumbering consciences as to produce the transfer of whatever bribes they have received to the State Treasury. We should object to a homily even on this head being delivered as prayer. But when Mr. BELDING spares the guilty members and prays at the lobby—when he flatters the corrupt principal and expends his wrath upon the agent—the parade of virtue looks like pharisaism, and the ceremony of prayer like a veritable burlesque.

Chaplains have their uses in legislative bodies, we are bound to believe. We don't know what these uses are, but the wise lawgivers doubtless do. Thus, however, is clear: when chaplains pander to the prejudices or the desires of those who appointed them, or make prayer a pretext for dilating on debatable secular topics, they prostitute their vocation and bring scandal on the religion they profess to serve.

The Cuban Muddle.

The Havana telegrams, which have already told us so much about Cuba, tell us one thing more, namely, that "the news from the seat of war is so contradictory and partisan as to be utterly unreliable." Now, there is yet one thing more that we would like to know, namely, where is "the seat of war"?

Our Havana correspondent explains some of the Spanish accounts of victories on the ground of a prevalent theory that "the insurgents do not fire at the troops with powder and ball, but with rose water, ginger nuts, and preserved fruit." This, we think, satisfactorily accounts for the rosy Spanish accounts of the results of such encounters as take place; but it fails to explain the news of the battles that do not occur at all. However, it seems that a new power has now asserted its supremacy—the Cuban volunteers, who are sufficiently bloodthirsty; and what with Cuban volunteers on the one hand, and Catalonian volunteers on the other, there will soon be hot work. But does not Mr. BANKS regard the "contradictory, partisan and utterly unreliable" news from Cuba as just about the right ground to go upon to justify our recognition of the insurgents forthwith?

Brownlow and Johnson.

The two famous Tennessee politicians, Ex-Governor BROWNLOW and Ex-President JOHNSON, are well matched. It is "nip and tuck" between them, which shall get the best of the other, and the spectacle of their contests is edifying. Both believe that "fine words butter no parsnips," and in swinging around the circle do not mince matters for opponents. However, the Parson seems to have got the better of the President (how admirably fitted for Parson and President, in temperament and education, both have been!) in the issue raised by the latter regarding the $1,500 paid by him to establish BROWNLOW's Knoxville paper in 1862. It is true, as BROWNLOW alleges, that the impression created by Mr. JOHNSON's speech is that this money came out of the latter's pocket, "whereas he did not contribute one dollar of it." It did not even come from Tennessee loyalists, it appears, but from the "funds of the Federal Government," through Mr. JOHNSON, as Military Governor. The Ex-President will probably not take this blow meekly, without a responsive whack from his own cudgel, and, if not, BROWNLOW, in turn, will repay with interest. They are well paired, and well skilled in gladiatorial combats of this sort—it is "six of one and half a dozen of the other." Both are earnest, honest, obstinate and self-convinced. If both are, as Mr. JOHNSON phrases it, "bent," neither is "broken;" and they are perhaps good for many a bout of wordy warfare yet.

Exit the Indian Bureau.

The Indian Bureau "still lives," but shorn of all that made it dear to its patrons, and "dearer" still to the people. It is now an empty name, an organization without a use, a machine without motive power, a shell, a husk—its occupation gone. In its place we find what may be called the Quaker Bureau, a new and interesting experiment in Indian policy.

We have traced from time to time the contrary action of House and Senate on the Indian appropriations, working like a "balky team," which, accordingly, General GRANT, from some previous experience in that direction, has taken in hand. This action may be tersely reviewed and summed up as follows: First, the House, by a large vote, demanded the restoration of the Indian Bureau to the War Department, which the Senate declined to grant; but made three other propositions, one for the appointment of an Indian Commission, one for a separate Indian Department in the Cabinet, and one for the retention of Indian control in the Interior in time of peace, and in the War Department in time of war. The House demurred to all these plans, and asked a Joint Committee on Indian Affairs, to which, of course, the Senate did not accede.

While matters were thus, the Indian appropriations came up for action. The House having adopted one theory, the Senate very naturally adopted the other; between the two steeds the bill slipped to the ground, and it was the only important appropriation bill which suffered that fate at the close of the last Congress.

As soon, therefore, as the present Congress assembled, the Indian again came into the foreground. The House desired to appropriate something over two millions for the annual disbursements under existing treaties, and accordingly the Senate amended by trebling the appropriations. The Senate would not recede, neither would the House. But at this juncture came in a new element, in the shape of the now famous Friends' proposition. This was, in brief, as we have already explained, a proposition that the President should appoint a Commission of ten persons "eminent for their intelligence and philanthropy," to exercise the whole control, under the direction of Secretary COX, of the annual disbursements to the Indians, and of an additional two millions, to be placed at the discretionary disposal of the President, for the purpose of "civilizing the Indians."

This proposition the Committee of Conference agreed to, and the House affirmed their decision. So stands the Indian question for the present, and the practical results of the new policy will be watched with profound interest.

MINOR TOPICS.

A dispatch from Washington announces that a very general change of the incumbents of offices in the Internal Revenue Department may be looked for, not because of any necessity for such a change to the public service nor on account of differences of political opinion, but because of the extreme outside pressure for places. This is the worst possible reason, and one which we hope will not be made the basis of action. If officers are to be dismissed, not because they are unfaithful or incompetent, or even unsound politically, but simply because other persons want their places, we may bid good-bye to all hopes of an honest or effective civil service, and to everything like stability in some of the most important operations and departments of the Government. This is the very evil against which we have been assured the new Administration intended most resolutely to set its face. We hope it will take no such action as that announced.

Senator SPRAGUE certainly showed as much personal bravery as any officer on the field at Bull Run. But he has shown still more of late in the Senate,—and with just about the same result.

A correspondent writes us that he considers the condition of the Fifth-avenue pavement a "disgrace to the City and to the officer or officers whose duty it is to keep the streets in a passable condition." We do not agree with him. This City cannot be disgraced;—it has passed that point long ago. Besides there is nobody whose business it is to keep the streets either clean, safe or passable. The most diligent search has been made for such a person for the last few years, and he cannot be found. Perhaps our correspondent meant to say that the condition of Fifth-avenue "would be a disgrace to any city pretending to be decently governed." Perhaps so; but New-York makes no such pretence, and has not for many years. But what difference does it make? A horse-railroad in Fifth-avenue will be chartered this Winter, and will be running through it within two years.

Is the millenium coming, or what's the matter? The passage by the Senate of HALE'S Anti-Bribery-and-Corruption bill prompts the inquiry. Even MATTOON voted for it. Now for the Assembly.

In reply to a correspondent we beg to state that the cheapest, as well as the safest and most convenient, way to send copies of books, bound or unbound, to friends either in this country or in Great Britain, is through the post. The rates are not high: application at the Post Office will doubtless ascertain what they are. Our postal arrangements have been greatly improved within the last few years.

Congress adjourns to-day, but the President has called an Executive Session of the Senate to act on his nominations.

Never has legislation on any important political measure been more prompt, than the action of both Houses of Congress on the bill providing for the erection of civil government in Virginia and Mississippi. On Wednesday, when the present session was approaching its close, and when no more political legislation was looked for, President GRANT sent a special message, asking the adoption of measures for the civil reconstruction of these two States. On Thursday a bill was introduced to the House, and, after a short debate, passed by the party majority. On Friday (yesterday) the Senate passed the bill by a heavy majority, with the addition of Senator MORTON's amendment, and the bill thus amended was immediately passed by the House. But for the message sent to Congress by President GRANT at the last hour, no action on the question would have been taken till next year.

Parson BROWNLOW states, in the card we published yesterday, that ANDREW JOHNSON, while Military Governor of Tennessee in 1862, gave him $1,500 out of the funds of the Federal Government to aid in establishing his newspaper in Knoxville. We should like to know where he got authority to do anything of the sort. We were not aware that the Federal Government ever undertook to establish or support newspapers anywhere, and should like to see the law of Congress under which such a disposition was made of the public funds.

What does the Press mean by talking of TWITCHELL's "confession?" Before committing suicide, which seems to have been the most creditable of his performances, he concocted a story charging his wife with the crime of which he was convicted, and said he did this in order to "make his peace with his God." To call that a "confession," is a strange perversion of the meaning of language. We are rather surprised that TWITCHELL did not say more about having made his peace with God, and dying happy, and forgiving everybody, and feeling sure he was going straight to Heaven. There is rather less of this balderdash in his last words than is usual with scoundrels of his class. Probably the prospect of being hung interfered with it. If he had been hung, as he should have been, we should, doubtless, have had a copious addition to this editying species of literature.

Our Legislature finds no difficulty in voting millions of dollars by way of aid to country railroads, nor in giving private companies power to lay down new railroads in all the streets of the City. But there is one thing which it cannot,—or will not,—do, and that is to charter a company to provide New-York with a cheap cab system. Why is this? Of all the things which New-York needs, there is not one that it needs more; and there is absolutely nobody interested in its not having it, except the livery stables and hack owners, who now make the whole thing a nuisance. How happens it that they have the power always to squelch every attempt to authorize a decent system? But why is any charter necessary? Cannot individuals form a company to run cabs, on paying the City Revenue, as well as to do any other kind of business?

We shall hear nothing more of chartering new City railroads after this session of the Legislature. Their work is a vacant street left to run one in. All that can hereafter be done will be to authorize the Companies to run when they like and charge as much as they like. This will be the next thing in order.

The upper part of Fifth-avenue, indeed of the whole City, looks very much like a newly-discovered gulch in the mining districts of the extreme West; and, indeed, what with the ruts in the pavement, heaps of stones and bricks in the street, and incessant blasting on every side, it is about as dangerous. New-York may possibly be finished at some remote era of the world's history, and then it will be a comfortable place to live in. But the man is not yet born who will live to see it in that condition.

We have been highly edified by the Tribune's earnest exhortations to the various departments of the National, State and City Governments to get along with as few subordinates and to pay them as little money as they possibly can. This indicates a sublime ignorance of the objects for which Governments exist among men, and of the chief end and aim of those who get control of them. What are departments for but to create places for office-holders, and what do office-holders exist for but to get as much money as they possibly can? When these things are forgotten, or cease to be acted upon, we may "roll up the map" and abolish everything. The world won't be worth "running" any longer. If the Tribune doubts, let it ask the first head of department it meets,—either here, in Albany or in Washington.

The Vox de Cuba (Havana) says:

"Captain MENDIGUREN, of the San Quintin battalion, surprised the small rebel camp near Bayamo, and coming close together, both parties were under the necessity of firing on each other, the rebels killing their own chief, PALLO MALLEZA, the Chief of Staff of General FIGUEREDO, in the confusion."

The italicized words are those of the Vox de Cuba. How horrible it is for two contending armies to fire on each other; such accidents ought to be avoided with the greatest care.

THE PLOT AGAINST BROADWAY.

The Broadway Surface Railroad Bill—Important Questions for the Taxpayers of New-York.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

From a careful survey of the operations, past, present and prospective, of the "assigns" of the grantees named in the Broadway Railroad bill now before the Legislature, it is believed that if the effort to pass it this session fails, it will not be renewed again for some time to come. Large sums of money have been raised for this last dying struggle, and, if unsuccessful, the speculation will be abandoned sine die. Yet there is reason to fear that, if it should be passed, it will become a law, as there are rumors from Albany that the Governor's veto will be interposed only in case votes enough can be secured in advance to pass the bill notwithstanding his objections.

By reference to section 1 of the bill, it will be observed that a large number of obscure and unknown names as grantees, which do not appear in the City Directory, or on the internal revenue or City and County tax books—men who have no fixed habitation or home—return no income and pay no taxes. But as their "assigns" are authorized to lay, construct and operate this road, probably these grantees will never be heard of if the bill passes. We are told that the assignment of their interest in the road is already in the hands of "their assigns," whose names can be found in the Legislative Manual for this year.

Section 9 provides that all suits, actions, or proceedings relating to the construction or operation of the road, shall be commenced in the Supreme Court, First District. Why these anticipated legal proceedings are confined to this particular district alone, is best known to the "assigns"—but we suppose it is because they are sure of their law, aided by Sharp practice.

There is another important consideration to the public, which these "assigns" have taken care to overlook, and that is the time for the commencement and finishing of the work. Not a word is said in the bill as to when the road shall be commenced, the length of time to be occupied in building it, or when it shall be finished. Once in possession of the streets, with the pavements torn up, which in Broadway has just been laid at an expense of over half a million of dollars, the omnibuses, carts and other vehicles turned out, and all means of transporting passengers and merchandise absolutely prohibited along the line of this road, without any limit as to the length of time these streets shall remain in this condition, strikes us as one of the most stupendous and appalling robberies of the people ever witnessed.

It is to be hoped that property-owners, taxpayers, and all others who wish to see our own great, unrivaled Broadway kept open and free from railroads—who desire that we may have at least one street in New-York in which our annual parades of the military, Fire Department, Police, St. Patrick's procession, and other great public receptions, may pass in review—will send such a remonstrance to the Legislature as will strike terror to the hearts of the noble army of martyrs who, while affecting to perform a great public benefit, opposed only, as they allege, by millionaires, are seeking to become millionaires themselves. The Seventh Regiment Ball.

It may be noticed that the Seventh never announces a ball. It has had a number, but they have always been called receptions or promenade concerts. It lately went so far as to give notice of a promenade concert and "hop" for last Thursday evening at the Academy of Music, and a very brilliant affair it proved. No ornamentation, in addition to that possessed by the beautiful Academy, was indulged in, except that of two regimental flags and a splendid Alpine scene at the back of the stage, in front of which, upon the floor, was a platform for the band, which performed most exhilarating music. The promenade concert announced, continued from 8 till 10, and played the guests into the house until the dancing commenced. Carriages, extending through Fourteenth-street and Irving-place, and far along the Third-avenue, deposited a freight of beauties, blooming with youth and life. It was observed that the participants of the festivities were nearly all young. Youth predominated to a far greater degree than at previous balls of the season. The invited guests were numerous. There were Major-General SICKLES and staff, Brigadier-General VIVIAN and staff, all the heads of brigades in the City militia and their staffs; all the colonels of regiments with their adjutants; all the regular army officers stationed here, together with the Governor and his staff, and the Mayor. Added to these were Brigadier-General BURNSIDE, of the First Connecticut Brigade, formerly a member of the Seventh, and Captain WARD, of the British army.

In addition to these on the crowded floor, the boxes were well filled with spectators. The dancing ceased at 1 o'clock.

Political Prisoners Publicly Garroted in Havana—A Crowd Fired Upon by Soldiers—Six Persons Killed.

HAVANA, Friday, April 9.

FRANCISCO LEON and AUGUSTIN MEDINA were garroted to-day in presence of a vast crowd of spectators. They both maintained their composure and firmness to the last. LEON, in mounting the scaffold, shouted "Viva Independencia." There was great excitement among the spectators. Some parties uttered seditious cries, and the volunteers, who guarded the scaffold, faced about and fired about twenty shots into the crowd, with disastrous effect. Six men were killed and many wounded.

Heavy rains have fallen during the present week throughout the Island.

The Government to Purchase Monitors in New-York—The Triumvirate Proposition Abandoned.

MADRID, Friday, April 9.

The Government is about to send a naval commission to New-York to purchase monitors for service in the Cuban waters.

The proposition to establish a triumvirate has been abandoned. It met with many practical objections, the most formidable of which was that any immediate change in the form of the administration would tend to delay the settlement of the financial difficulties of the country.

MADRID, Friday, April 9—Evening.

Much political excitement exists in the city, and apprehensions are entertained that the exasperation of party feeling will result in an outbreak of violence. The Police and military authorities are taking every precaution to prevent disorder.

The appointment of General CABALLERO DE RODA to the Captain-Generalship of Cuba has not been finally determined upon by the Provisional Government; but should General DE RODA be retained in his command in this country, Don ISQUIERDO will probably succeed Captain-General DULCE.

Additional supplies of artillery and cavalry are demanded for the suppression of the rebellion in Cuba.

Burning of the Steamboat General Grant at New-Orleans and the Propeller Thames off Hatteras.

NEW-ORLEANS, Friday, April 9.

The steamship General Grant took fire at 12 o'clock last night, while lying at the wharf, and burned until she sunk. The vessel was not injured in this city, and the loss falls on Northern companies. During the progress of the fire, her commander, Captain QUICK, whose mind was apparently affected by his great loss, several times attempted to commit suicide by throwing himself into the burning vessel. Only a portion of the vessel's cargo was on board, which consisted of bulk grain, bagging, oils and cotton seed. That portion of the cargo on the wharf was not damaged.

NORFOLK, Va., Friday, April 9.

The propeller Thames, Captain PENNINGTON, owned by the Black Star Line, which sailed from New-York for Galveston at 1 o'clock on the morning of the 4th inst., took fire on the 6th of April, when about fifteen miles off Hatteras. The fire originated between decks, and burned the vessel to the water's edge. The hull went down in 16 fathoms of water, within four hours after the breaking out of the fire. GEO. DRAKER, the ship's cook; JOHN CLIFTHORN and CHAS. MASON, seamen, one seaman and a coal passer, who put off in a small boat, have not been heard from and are supposed to be lost. All the others at the time on board the vessel, including four passengers, have arrived safely in this city. The Thames was loaded with an assorted cargo, and had hay between decks. The Captain is unable to account for the origin of the fire.

ST. JOHN, N. B., Friday, April 9.

The steamer Empress, while on her passage from Windsor to St. John, struck on a sunken rock and almost immediately filled. She was run ashore at Black River, where she now lies in a dangerous position. Her passengers, 120 in number, were all safely landed here this morning by the steamer Prince of Wales.

The Trouble in the Office of the Louisiana Auditor.

NEW ORLEANS, Friday, April 9.

Affairs at the Auditor's office are becoming more muddled daily. The Seventh District Court yesterday ordered the books and documents belonging to the Auditor's office to be put in the possession of a judicial sequestrator, who was by the same order appointed. Governor WARMOTH to-day notified said sequestrator that he would apply to the Supreme Court for a writ of prohibition from the exercise of the powers conferred by the Seventh District Court, upon the back of the order of the Court. The Governor made a long speech, reciting that both Auditor WICKLIFFE and SALASER (the Governor's appointee) had been enjoined by the Fifth and Seventh District Courts respectively, and both punished for contempt in disobeying the injunctions; and that therefore, there being no one authorized by law to discharge the duties of the Auditor's office, he had, by virtue of authority as Governor of the State, taken possession of the paraphernalia of the Auditor's office and declined to deliver them to the sequestrator appointed by the Court.

Governor WARMOTH filed in the Supreme Court his petition for a writ of prohibition against the sequestrator. Meantime no business is being done in the Auditor's office.

THE GOLD MINE CALAMITY.

The Catastrophe at the Nevada Gold Mine—Forty Lives Lost—The Fire Broken Out Afresh and Raging Furiously—Ten Bodies Still Unrecovered.

SAN FRANCISCO, Thursday, April 9—Midnight.

Telegraphic advices from the Gold Hill Mine, to nine o'clock this evening, have been received. Twenty-eight bodies had been recovered. The fire was still burning on the 600-foot level of the Yellow Jacket Mine. The drift was cleared this morning, and a strong stream of water was brought to bear on the flames at about 4 o'clock this afternoon. It was expected that the fire would be entirely subdued before morning.

It is now stated that at least forty men perished by this awful calamity. The bodies which have been recovered thus far present a horrible appearance, and indicate the desperate efforts made to escape intense suffering.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Friday, April 9.

It is reported that the fire is still burning furiously in the mines at Gold Hill, having broken out afresh this morning in the drift of the Crown Point Company.

It is thought it will be necessary to close the shafts, in order to smother the flames. Ten bodies yet remain in the mines, and it is impossible to remove them, on account of the heat and smoke.

Railroads in the Streets of Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, Friday, April 9.

The City Councils yesterday passed a resolution rescinding the ordinance extending the time for the removal of the freight railroad track on Broad-street. Workmen were last evening put to work, and during the night the track was removed. The Councils had extended the time for the removal of the track until July 1, at the desire of the merchants, to enable them to move the incoming crop, signing an agreement that no further effort would be made to delay the work. Notwithstanding this agreement, the bill had been introduced in the Legislature to procure another postponement, which the Councils rendered nugatory by the immediate destruction of the track.

The New Market on Forty-second-Street.

For some time past the residents of the upper portion of our City have deeply felt the want of a first-class market. This want will, on the completion of the edifice now in course of erection on Forty-second-street and Fourth-avenue, be amply supplied. The new building is to be known as Croton Market. It has an area of 30,000 square feet, fronting 150 feet on Forty-second-street and extending through to Forty-third-street, having the same frontage on that. The market will contain about 180 stalls, and it is designed to have for sale in them all varieties of meats, vegetables, fruits and groceries, everything in fact that a family can possibly require for daily use. In the building there is to be a mammoth refrigerator, erected for the use of butchers and poultry dealers. It will be a room about 140 feet long by 40 wide, and the temperature at all times will be kept just about the freezing point. This is said to be a new feature in New-York markets.

The stands in the main market floor are to be uniform in every particular, and handsomely and neatly furnished. In addition to the privilege of using the mammoth refrigerator, each butcher will be supplied with a large ice-box. The main passage runs through from Forty-second to Forty-third street, and will be twelve feet wide. It is intended to make this a drive for carriages, both to give peculiar facility in distributing, and to afford ladies an opportunity of marketing without annoyance. The corner passages, of which there are eight, will be eight feet wide each. The floor of the building is to be constructed of narrow plank, stained alternately light and dark, giving an exceedingly pleasing effect. The planks are two and a half inches thick, and all the joints are to be calked.

The roof is to be open timber work and panelled in polychrome. The posts supporting the roof are to be ornamented and stained. The main hall is to be lighted by three skylights, each 120 feet long. On Forty-second-street a second-story will be constructed and capped with a Mansard roof. This will give a hall 150 by 40, which is to be divided into restaurants, or it could be used for a public meeting hall or drill room. In the market each stall will be supplied with water and gas without extra charge. The appearance of the building when lighted up, as it will be on Saturday night, will be very attractive. The utmost cleanliness will be required from the marketmen, who will be obliged to wash the market thoroughly every night.

The market, situated as it is in the centre of the island, on a broad street, and adjoining the terminus of the Harlem and New-Haven Railroads, can secure the freshest of provisions of all kinds from New-England, the North and the Canadas. Westchester County will also send in large supplies. The regulations of the market require the occupants to be neat and polite to buyers. It is expected that everything will be ready for the public opening on the 15th of May next.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE.

A Great Malt-House Consumed—Loss Over Three Hundred Thousand Dollars.

At 12:50 o'clock this morning an alarm was given for a fire caused by the discovery of flames in the malt-house of REDLINGER, SMITH & Co., Nos. 408 to 414 East Forty-seventh-street. This great structure was 195 feet front on Forty-seventh street by 200 feet deep, running through to Forty-sixth-street, where it had the same frontage, and had a uniform elevation of seven stories. When first discovered, the flames were of very small volume, but they spread with unexampled rapidity, and in less than twenty minutes the destruction of the entire edifice seemed so imminent that Chief-Engineer KENGLAND caused a second alarm to be sounded, and thus called all the reserve engines to the scene. This addition to the force employed against the conflagration proved, however, entirely unavailing, and the flames continued to rush through the building with such speed, that within an hour from the time they were first discovered the entire interior had been eaten out and nearly all the walls had fallen in. On Forty-seventh-street nothing was left but the massive corners, and on Forty-sixth-street the same damage had been wrought, while the side walls had crumbled and fallen to more than half their altitude. It was impossible, owing to the lateness of the hour and the abounding confusion to learn anything as to the origin of the fire or gather any exact details as to the exact loss. It was, however, estimated by those connected with the firm who happened to be on the ground at over $300,000. The property adjoining was, by the strenuous exertions of the firemen, all saved except a small frame dwelling which was partially destroyed. The great tenement-house in First-avenue, the rear of which abutted on the roaring mass of flame, was seriously threatened with destruction, but was saved unscathed.

Arson and Burglary—Arrest of the Person Suspected of the Crimes.

About 8:30 o'clock on the evening of the 11th day of March last, a fire that was as mysterious in its origin as it was undestructive in its result, broke out on the fifth floor of the building No. 144 Clinton-street, occupied by F. HOUSTING, manufacturer of furs for Jerome Bacon, No. 449 Broadway, to whom the stock in the place belonged. Mr. HOUSTING left there about 6 o'clock, and half an hour afterward the fire was discovered, and being quickly extinguished, the loss was trifling. An examination, however, showed that the door had been forced open, and that valuable mink skins and other furs to the amount of $1,000 had been stolen. It was, therefore, evident that some adroit rascal had forced an entrance into the premises and stolen the furs, and had added the crime of arson in order to cover those of burglary and theft. The case was given in charge of Sergeant HIGGINS and Officer FISHER, of the Thirteenth Precinct, who worked at it diligently, but for some time without success. Mr. HOUSTING lived at No. 146 Clinton-street, and, at the time of the fire, one MATHIAS J. ROSENBOOK resided on the same floor. About two weeks after the fire this man suddenly moved away. This caused suspicion to be directed toward him, and the officers finally got upon his track again and discovered that he had removed to No. 60 Newark-street, Hoboken. Thenceforward they watched him closely, and yesterday arrested him. They found $700 worth of the stolen furs in his possession. He attempted to explain at first that he had purchased them of a peddler on the Hoboken Ferry-boats, but subsequently declared that he had been intrusted with them to sell on commission. The officers, however, declined to credit either statement, and not content with the success that had attended their efforts, are still engaged in the case, and hope to recover the remainder of the property to-day. The prisoner will, however, be arraigned before Justice MANSFIELD, at the Essex Market Police Court, this morning, and formal complaints will be made against him.

Velocipede Matters—The Festival at the Velocipedrome.

Last night the Jersey City Velocipedrome was crowded to excess with the most fashionable assemblage of spectators ever seen within the building. The occasion was the first grand velocipede festival of the season, one of the most attractive programmes we have yet seen being prepared for the evening's entertainment. The feature of the proceedings was the contest for the gold medal, in which two competitors rode against each other half mile heats, best two out of three. This proved to be a very exciting race; an interesting trial of speed in races against time also marked the occasion. The most pleasing part of the entertainment, however, was the exhibition by lady experts on the new "Peerless" bicycle. The riders were the "professionals," but ladies' moving in private life, who, having learned to ride for recreative exercise merely, have consented to perform in public simply to prove that ladies can ride the bicycle velocipedes without any sacrifice of modesty or respect of their friends. The riding by the ladies proved to be the most attractive part of the entertainment, as the race for the gold medal, owing to an accident to one of the machines, had to be ridden on small machines, the time being poor. The beautiful gold medal was won by Mr. MURPHY, a young lawyer of Jersey City, he defeating Mr. MORLAR, his opponent. A game of tag closed the performance.

Fire in Hudson City.

An incendiary fire took place in Hudson City last evening, by which a building worth $3,000 was destroyed, and a man is supposed to have been burned. About 1:30 A. M. yesterday, Officers GALLAGHER and BUELER observed flames issue from a two-story and basement frame dwelling, owned and occupied by THOMAS MURPHY, at the corner of Passaic-avenue and Warren-street. A very strong odor of kerosene seemed to issue from the building. While attempting to effect an entrance, a man in an opposite house told the officers that MURPHY was asleep in the basement. With the intention of rescuing the man they made an effort to enter the basement, but failed to do so in consequence of the heat. A fire alarm had been already given, but over an hour elapsed before the engines were ready for work. By a great effort, horses were rescued from a stable close by, but the building was burned to the ground. The loss is estimated at $3,000, on which there is an insurance of $2,000. MURPHY is supposed to have been burned in the building, although no traces of his remains have yet been discovered.

The Police Commissioners and the Spring Valley Murder.

A regular meeting of the Board of Police Commissioners was held yesterday, when they created a new sub-precinct to be attached to the Forty-third (Brooklyn) Precinct. The new precinct embraces what is generally known as the Red Hook District, lying South of Hamilton-avenue. Roundsman JAMES J. KELSO, of the Detective Squad, was promoted to the position of Sergeant, and he will continue in command of the detectives. Superintendent KENNEDY sent to the Board a communication relative to the Spring Valley murder, in which he declares that no private detective had anything to do with the arrest of the accused. GEORGE H. BANGS, General Superintendent of PINKERTON'S Police Agency, also sent a communication to the Board, in which he claims that the case was "worked up" by the detectives of the agency, and that it was through their instrumentality that Policeman PHELPS was enabled to make the arrest.

Complimentary Dinner to a Journalist.

Last evening a complimentary dinner was given at the Astor House, by a number of fellow-journalists, to Mr. JUNIUS HENRI BROWNE, formerly war correspondent of the Tribune, on the occasion of his departure to Europe. Shanks, Whitelaw Reed, R. V. Colburn, S. S. Packard, and others.

Probable Suicide.

A young man named WM. RAMSEY, formerly an assistant cashier in A. T. STEWART & Co.'s establishment, cut his throat last Sunday evening at No. 123 East Thirtieth-street, where he was boarding. He had been unfortunate in business on Wall-street, and returning to the City, was unsuccessful in the effort to find something to do. Very slight hopes of his recovery are entertained. His despondency, because his circumstances rendered it impossible for him to marry a lady residing in the same house, led to the commission of the foolish act.

Wife of St. Paul's Church.

The ladies of St. Paul's Dutch Reformed Church closed the Fair last evening that they have been holding for several days at No. 164 Fifth-avenue. The congregation leased some time ago their church in Twenty-first-street, between Fifth and Sixth-avenues, and purchased in Tremor's Hall, Sixth-avenue. They have now bought for $70,000 the Unitarian Church of Sandusky, Mr. BROTHERHAM in Fulton-street, whose congregation will worship in Tremor's Hall, in Sixth-place.

Lecture on Still Power.

Rev. THOS. A. JAGGER delivered a lecture on "Still Power" at the Rooms of the Young Men's Christian Association. The point of the discourse was, that though great power was often coupled, both in man and nature, with frequent volubility and noise, yet the greatest force in both seldom gave vent to expression.

NEW-YORK, Feb. 26, 1869.
Messrs. Fuller & Burgess:
I has delighted with your new patented Steel "Fitting" Tuck Marker, or Creaser; I call it the "Revelee," it fills me with ever-increasing admiration to see how perfectly it imitates our fingers in "PINCHING" up the tucks, increases on all kinds of goods the possibility of injuring the most delicate fabric. It gives me a new inspiration to find I AM DOWN WITH MEASURE, MARKING AND CREASING AT HAND, and I FEEL BY the tactile feeler A WILLING SPIRIT, capable of speed, tucking as high as 214 yards per day. The secure HIDING PLACE for the EDGE of the PREVIOUSLY MADE TUCK, OUT OF THE WAY, where it will not be in the REMOTE OF GROWS the WORK to or from the Gauge, is capital, as is also the Automatic CLOTH SMOOTHER, and the Steel, elevated, projecting bed, to receive the TUCK (being the second) from under the Tucker, GUIDE. The arrangement for FORCING the cloth to move in a STRAIGHT LINE, will be appreciated by those who have difficulty in guiding their work. I AM, GENTLEMEN, VERY SORELY, you hardly know it is on the machine. With the Independent Measuring Scale, on the fixed bed, for both Gauge and Crease, there is no difficulty whatever in adjusting it, (the scale being always adjusted to each other,) and it is so convenient to be able to remove it and replace it again without losing the set of either Gauge or Crease, it leaves nothing more to be desired.

THE DANISH ISLANDS: ARE WE BOUND IN HONOR TO PAY FOR THEM?
BY JAMES PARTON.
8vo., paper. 25 cents.

In this pamphlet Mr. Parton sets forth clearly and graphically the facts in regard to the purchase of the Danish Islands by Secretary Seward, and shows conclusively that good faith and the best interests of our nation require us to complete the purchase of these islands immediately by paying for them.

An able writer says: "Let America do what she will in building iron-clads and casting cannon, she can never become a first-class naval Power until she acquires ports abroad; indeed, she is but helping forward a change which puts her at relative disadvantage. It was in view of these facts that Mr. Seward cast about to see where we could obtain defensible and well-placed harbors in other lands. His fixed upon St. Thomas, and we cannot help thinking that in this he showed the judgment of a statesman. It has the best harbor in the West Indies, save that of Havana, which is not perhaps superior. It can be made a second Gibraltar at comparatively small expense. It is situated as a kind of four-corners on the ocean-highways—just far enough away from our own shores, and within striking distance of South America and of the opposite continent . . . . It seems to us that a right sense of honor and a due appreciation of national interest should lead this country to complete the purchase of St. Thomas with the least possible delay."

CAMP-LIFE IN THE ADIRONDACKS.
BY
Rev. WILLIAM H. H. MURRAY.
One vol., 16mo. Eight full-page Illustrations. $1 50.

Rev. Mr. Murray, the Pastor of Park-st. Church, in Boston, presents in this volume a record of his own camp-life experience in the Adirondacks. He has for several years spent a couple of months in the Summer time, accompanied by his family, in the wilderness of the "North Woods," living the life of a hunter and fisher, with all the hands and appliances for taking deer and trout. He is a practical

REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS.

There were no sales at the Exchange Salesroom yesterday, and there will be none to-day. The week has been quite an interesting one, and the number of actual sales a little better, perhaps, than the previous week. The general belief is that the coming week will be considerably better than the one just closed. The market has been moderately firm, and, for certain kinds of property, has shown a disposition to advance. The continued tightness of the money market has had very considerable influence in the depression of real estate, and to it the recent dullness may be attributed to a very great degree.

The sales for Monday are scarcely as large as usual, but they embrace several pieces of quite desirable property, and will probably call together a large audience.

Mr. JAMES M. MILLER will sell eighty Washington Heights lots. They are delightfully located on Tenth-avenue, One Hundred and Sixty-fifth-street, Eastern Boulevard and Harlem River. They adjoin the residences of the late Mme. JUMEL, and are within 460 feet of the St. Nicholas-avenue, (Kingsbridge road.) The elevation is about 185 feet above the river, and the view is quite extensive. They are easy of access by the Eighth-avenue cars, stages, Harlem boats, Hudson River Railroad, &c.

Messrs. MULLER, WILKINS & CO. will sell the plot of land, with the buildings thereon, situate on the northeast corner of Washington and West Tenth streets; the two-story and attic frame house and lot, new No. 211 West Tenth-street; the three-story high-stoop Dorchester stone house and lot No. 420 Lexington-avenue; the three-story high-stoop brick house and lot No. 145 East Twenty-ninth-street; four lots, situate on the south side of One Hundred and Fourth-street, 200 feet west of Third-avenue; the three-story and attic brick house and lot No. 16 West Washington-place; the three-story high-stoop brick house and lot No. 55 Ninth-street.

The sales for Tuesday and the remaining days of the week are quite extensive, and are more than usually attractive.

ALBANY.

The Scheme for Laying Railroad Tracks in Broadway.

How the Railroad Ring Has Managed the Job.

An Attempt to be Made to Pass the Bill To-Day.

An Adverse Report on the Amended Excise Bill.

FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.

ALBANY, Friday, April 9, 1869.

The Broadway Railroad scheme—the great thieving job of the session—displayed itself in its true colors in the Senate to-day. As I have stated heretofore the original bill introduced the first part of the session, by Mr. GERRY, which has lain in the hands of the Railroad Committee until yesterday, was a comparatively harmless affair; that is to say, it was substantially what it purported to be—a railroad for Broadway and a few other streets. Not until last Wednesday was it known that any other bill than this was intended to be pushed for a railroad in Broadway. Mr. FITCH, who came up here to oppose the scheme on behalf of the stage proprietors, had heard that another bill was intended to be brought forward at the last moment, and he demanded a copy of it in order that he might know precisely what he was to oppose, and frame his argument accordingly. It was reluctantly handed over to him the night before he was to address the Committee, and a general idea of its provisions was given in my letter yesterday. It never appeared in print, however, until this morning, when Senators were astonished to find it on their files among general orders marked No. 60. Not one of the Senators outside of the Railroad Committee, except perhaps those who are in the job, had ever seen or heard of any such bill. No copies of it were to be had this morning from any source, and I am indebted to a Senator for the permission to tear it from his file in order to send you a copy. The object of all this secrecy was to prevent public comment on the bill until all the "arrangements" had been made to rush it through the Legislature. It has all along been the intention of the concoctors of this colossal scheme of robbery to substitute this bill at the last moment for the one originally introduced, and, accordingly, as soon as the Senate went into Committee of the Whole to-day, Mr. GERRY moved to substitute the bill for the one reported adversely yesterday by the Railroad Committee, and disagreed with and sent to the Committee of the Whole. This was immediately carried and by the same vote that stood by the fraud during its subsequent progress, and which is bound to carry it through to the end. In order that the public may see what a majestic scheme of plunder they are to be made the victims of, I will here give the bill in full:

AN ACT.

The People of the State of New-York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

SECTION 1. The Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty of the City of New-York, represented in the Common Council of said City, that it is hereby authorized to operate a double track upon any or all the streets of any such street line or route, the Mayor, Aldermen and Commonalty of said City shall have the power to authorize and permit the owner or owners of any such street line or route, the lessee, assignee or assignees of such street line or route, or any other person or persons, to lay down such tracks upon such streets, and to use a single track upon such street, and operate the same by steam upon the motive power therein, running in the same direction, connecting such single tracks at such points on either of the avenues connected with or intersected as may be thought convenient, but nothing herein contained shall be construed to allow the said persons or their assigns to use more than one adjoining street.

SEC. 2. The railroad on the said routes shall be constructed of the best approved plan with the approbation of the City Railroad Board, shall be run as often as the convenience of passengers may require, and shall be subject to such reasonable rules and regulations as the Common Council of the City of New-York may from time to time by ordinance prescribe, and the said persons or their assigns are hereby authorized to charge upon the said railroad the same rate of fare for the conveyance of passengers as is now charged by other City Railroads in said City, and shall not be charged beyond one cent for each passenger without the authority of the Legislature.

SEC. 3. Should any real estate or interest therein be required for constructing the said railroads on the said route or routes as above specified and authorized, for which the said persons or their assigns shall be unable to agree with the owner or owners for the use or purchase thereof, they may acquire the right to use or title to the same in the manner specified in the Twenty-fifth, twenty-sixth, twenty-seventh, eighteenth, nineteenth, twentieth and twenty-first sections of the aforesaid act entitled "An act to authorize the formation of railroad corporations, and to regulate the same," passed April 2, 1850. In any of the proceedings authorized by this section or the third section of this act, it shall not be necessary that the petition to the Supreme Court shall make any allegations of or reference to any incorporation, capital stock, surveys or maps, or of the filing of any certificate of location. In all cases the use of said streets and avenues for the purposes of said railroad, as herein authorized, shall be considered a public use, consistent with the uses for which the Mayor, Aldermen and commonalty of said City hold said streets and avenues.

SEC. 4. It shall not be lawful for the said persons or their assigns, to use or employ steam power on the said railroad or any part thereof.

SEC. 5. It shall be the duty of any Court or tribunal before which any motion, action or proceeding relating to the construction or operation of any of said railroads shall be pending, to give preference to such motion, or action, or proceeding upon the calendar of such Court or the transaction of its business; and all actions and proceedings relating to the construction of said railroads, or the right to construct or operate the same, shall be commenced in the Supreme Court of the First Judicial District of the State.

SEC. 6. Nothing herein contained shall be deemed to authorize the construction of a railroad on the Fifth-avenue of said City, except to cross the same for the purposes herein authorized, unless a majority of the owners of the property along the line of the said avenue, as it is proposed to be traversed, shall first give their written consent thereto.

SEC. 7. Provisions of law inconsistent with this act shall affect the provisions of this act.

SEC. 11. This act shall take effect immediately.

As soon as the Senators who were not in the "ring" had recovered from their amazement at reading, one after another, the extraordinary provisions of the bill, they set to work moving amendments thereto. Senator PALMER moved that it be amended so as to allow the corporators to take possession of all the streets in New-York and have done with it, as they had already inserted in the bill all the principal streets with which he was acquainted. This and other amendments, whether offered in seriousness or sarcasm, were promptly voted down as fast as they appeared, and it soon became apparent that the "job" was already fixed so far as the Senate was concerned and that all opposition would be useless. Finally Mr. MORGAN offered an amendment that the franchise here granted be sold at public auction by the Comptroller of the City of New-York on the 1st day of June next, and that the proceeds of the sale go into the City Treasury. This, too, was voted down, the following Senators alone voting for it:

Messrs. Campbell, Chapman, Edwards, Folger, Hale, Morgan, Nichols, O'Donnell, Palmer, Parker, Thayer—11.

All the New-York members except Mr. CREAMER, who was not present, voted against the amendment. Some did not vote at all, and as the vote was taken by count, it being in Committee of the Whole, the yeas and nays cannot be given. The amendment was declared lost by the Chairman, Mr. CROWLEY, and Mr. MORGAN then said that the true character of this measure now stood revealed, and he denounced it then and there as the most wicked, corrupt and shameless bill that was ever introduced into the Legislature. It was conceived in corruption, born in corruption, and would be carried through in corruption. It was an outrage on the citizens of New-York, both in and out of the Metropolis, and if carried through would be a disgrace to the Legislature and to the State. In its whole length and breadth it was a corrupt and utterly indefensible bill.

Mr. O'DONNELL agreed with Mr. MORGAN in all he had said about the character of the bill, and said he could not feel that he had discharged his duty unless he denounced it publicly, and publicly entered his protest against it. The Broadway railroad scheme was surrounded with stench, there was not an honest feature in it and never had been since it was first broached in the Legislature years ago. The people of the whole State were watching the vote on this bill, and every man would have to answer to his constituents for his action upon it.

Mr. BEACH, of Cattaraugus, first came to the rescue of the bill, but made a very lame attempt to defend it. In fact, he did not advance a single argument in its favor, but pitched into MORGAN for calling it corrupt. He didn't know what MORGAN had to do with stigmatizing things done here, as moral or immoral. He should take the responsibility of his vote, and did not require the sanction of the Senator from the Twenty-eighth, or the people of his district.

Mr. MORGAN replied briefly, and said at a future time he should take the opportunity to trace the origin of this job and show that it was a combination of Erie and Tammany Hall.

This brought Mr. TWEED to his feet, who stammered out in his thick-tongued dialect that the gentleman had no right to say that, or to bring in any political organization into this discussion.

Mr. GERRY, too, protested against any such remark, and it was evident that MORGAN had hit them on the raw.

Senator MURPHY then offered an amendment that the Legislature should have power to amend, modify or repeal the bill at any future time. He went on to show how the bill had been so framed as to give to these men and their heirs or assigns in perpetual grant this enormous franchise, which could never hereafter be altered or touched by the Legislature.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. FOLGER then took the floor, and made the most earnest and powerful speech against the bill that was ever delivered in the Senate. The guilty concoctors of the scheme fairly withered and turned pale, (or red, according to the quantity of whisky in them,) at his impetuous and scathing rebuke of the rascality shown in this bill. While he had nothing to say of the motives of those who supported the bill, he denounced the iniquity of the scheme in the most unmeasured terms, the force and effect of which it would be impossible to transcribe to paper, even if I had time or space. He concluded his speech by saying that while the amendment offered by Mr. MURPHY was good so far as it went, yet it was a question with the Courts as to what effect such a section would have when appended to a grant like this. He would therefore offer an amendment striking out the first section, and inserting in its place such as one as would make it a corporation, which would bring it, like all other corporations, under the control of the Legislature. This much, at least, should be done if the bill were to pass.

Mr. HALE also opposed the bill, and said that it was far beyond any previous Broadway Railroad bill of which he had any knowledge, and could not be called, as it had been called, simply a revival of the Broadway Railroad scheme.

After some further discussion the Committee reported progress, and the bill was made the special order for to-morrow.

The design is to rush it through both Houses before the public have time to acquaint themselves with the true character of the scheme, and bring their indignation and opposition to bear against it.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

ENGLAND'S ANTIPHON. By GEORGE MACDONALD, LL. D. Philadelphia: LIPPINCOTT & Co. For sale in New-York by SHELDON & Co.

England's Antiphon is not, as some of our modern Ritualistic readers might be inclined to anticipate, an historical record of ecclesiastical music in England, or even a treatise on hymnology, strictly so called. The phrase is used by Dr. MACDONALD in a far wider sense, and with a far more extended application. He has sought to trace the course of English religious poetry from an early period of our literary history. His desire has been to set forth the true indications of the religious thought of the English people as manifested in its literary expression in religious poetry. It has not been his intention to attempt anything like a full history of the religious feeling of the nation in connection with its embodiment in verse; he only treats of certain of its principal phases in order to illustrate the full religious bearing of particular poems which he places in whole or in part before his readers. Poetry, he maintains, is the first form which religious utterance assumes in any nation which, as he expresses it, possesses "material capable of being cast in the mould of religious utterance." The literary importance of his subject he vindicates on the ground that "if the act of worship be the highest human condition, it follows that the highest human art must find material in the modes of worship"—"of the lyrical poems of England, religion possesses the most; of the epic, the best; of the dramatic, the oldest." And he justifies his treatment of the subject as a whole by the reflection that "although the individual song springs from the heart of the individual, the song of a country is not merely cumulative; it is vital in its growth, and therefore composed of historically dependent members." And, finally, his chief aim has been "the mediating towards an intelligent and cordial sympathy betwixt my readers and the writers from whom I have quoted."

We have that far made use as far as possible of Dr. MACDONALD'S own words in enunciating the scope and objects of his work. Our readers will have already perceived that his aims are lofty, and that his confidence in his own ability to carry them out is considerable. With regard to the merits of the work in which his labors have resulted, we are bound to say that notwithstanding certain faults in style, foremost among which is the tendency to carry subtlety of critical analysis to the point at which it verges on absurdity, if not uninteligibility, he has produced a most valuable contribution to the history of English literature. From the sacred lyrics of the thirteenth century, breathing nothing but passionate love and adoration for the human personality of our Saviour, full of tenderness, simplicity and devotion, and the grotesque miracle plays of the next century, down to the poems of to-day, expressive of the "faith that lives in honest doubt," as felt by TENNYSON and the class which, instead of flying to tradition for refuge from doubt, sets its face toward the spiritual East, and in prayer and sorrow and hope looks for a dawn; the noble band of reverent doubters, as unlike those of the last century who scoffed, as those of the present who "pass on the other side,"—no phase of religious belief in England is left without full and well-selected illustrations of its lyric, epic or dramatic manifestations, accompanied by explanatory comments and sympathetic criticism. The first signs of the coming reformation, as faintly shadowed forth in "The Vision of Piers Plowman;" the dawnings of deep religious thought evidenced in the poetry of the Spenserian age; the labored conceits of HERBERT and QUARLES; the strangely combined religious fervor, shrewd wit, quaint fancies, and poetic beauties of GEORGE HERBERT; the epic grandeur of MILTON—these are a few of the more prominent divisions of Dr. MACDONALD'S subject. And though he does not affect to conceal his sympathies with the school of to-day—that of TENNYSON, ARTHUR HUGH CLOUGH and MATTHEW ARNOLD—he never allows that sympathy to betray him into any injustice with regard to writers of the most widely-opposed schools of thought, into questioning their religious fervors or sincerity, or into harsh criticism. His is a truly catholic mind, and no genuine manifestation of religious thought that comes within the scope of his subject, fails to receive full and appreciative justice at his hands. He has traced the religious poetry of England "from simple song, lovingly regardful of sacred story and legend, through the chant of philosophy, to the full-toned lyrics of adoration," and while every student of English literature should be grateful to him for his critical labors, the deepest theologian may learn from and profit by his thoughtful contribution to the history of Christianity.

Brief Notices.

—Madame de Staël. By AMELY BOLTE. (New-York: G. P. PUTNAM & SON.) The genius of AMELY BOLTE resembles that of Miss BUNTBACH, she shows such a taste for renewing the most remarkable historic portraits with the help of whatever traits and colorings may be gathered from a variety of memoir writers. Our authoress here undertakes to represent in a number of scenes the biography of the celebrated Mme. DE STAËL, so identified with some of the most notable events of modern times, and made so attractive by the general charm of literature. She is guided by facts, but she interweaves them with fancies, and invents scenes and conversations. The critical and fastidious may object to such a mixture of reality and romance, but the sentimental reader will be happy to know Mme. DE STAËL through so attractive a medium. The following, which degarlies the visit of the great literary bareness to Italy, will give a fair idea of Miss BOLTE'S style:

"Accompanied by SCHLEGEL, BENJAMIN CONSTANT and her children, she visited Rome and Naples. Although she had entered upon her journey in the gloomiest state of mind, the novelty of the scene made an overwhelming impression on her, and hushed all her mournful recollections. The fine arts brought their powerful influence to bear on her. Art, politics, the longing of her lonely heart, the memories of the Past, all the grief of the Present, faded away at the contemplation of the countless monuments which so many ages had accumulated. She breathed a different air, she heard another language, the centuries of the Past spoke to her, and unrolled the most remote periods before her view. In Rome she met the fair-haired young CAROVA, whom she had formerly received at her house in Paris; she met there, furthermore, the two HUMBOLDTS, ELISA VON DER RECKE, a number of scientific and artists from all quarters of the globe, and, finally, SOPHIE BERNARDI, from Berlin, who had come to Rome probably in order to see if the gifted SCHLEGEL had not forgotten her, exposed as he was all the time to the rays of the inspiring eyes of the most interesting lady on earth. If she met with a sore disappointment, and if his fidelity had not stood the test, she confessed only to herself.

JOSEPH BONAPARTE had furnished Mme. DE STAËL also with letters of introduction to eminent men in Rome, in order to make her sojourn there as pleasant as possible; and she met with the most flattering reception. Her house became speedily the rendezvous of the most distinguished personages; and in the midst of this brilliant circle, her genius beamed as a bright star, and animated all who approached her.

Her gift of improvisation, her skill in reciting poetry and performing dramatic roles, soon were to renew old life; and as if the applause and admiration bestowed upon her, and her new-born enthusiasm for the fine arts, kept her in a constant state of rapturous excitement, she forgot herself, and the real happiness that was wanting to her heart, and her grief was hushed for awhile.

Her impressions gave rise to the creation of a new work of art, and Corinne—a book with which all my readers are familiar—was the fruit of her sojourn in Rome."

This work, excellently translated by Mr. THEODORE JOHNSON, is brought out in the well-known ornamental style of the publishers.

—Recollections of Men and Things at Washington. By L. A. GORBRIGHT. (Philadelphia: CLAXTON, REMSEN & HAFFELFINGER.) Mr. GORBRIGHT, having resided at Washington for the third part of a century, during which the population of the city rose from 30,000 to 110,000, has presented us, in the book before us, with a variety of things connected with Congress and the White House, such as will have an interest not alone for the people of that locality, but for the country at large. He brings to memory some of the most prominent parts played on that central stage, and the policy of the men who played them, beginning with General JACKSON'S Administration in 1824, when the National Bank was discussed. The book contains a number of anecdotes, among which we find the following about THOMAS H. BENTON:

"Hon. THOMAS H. BENTON did not always make use of elegant language. During the bank discussion he spoke of circulating notes as 'rags and humbuck,' and of gold coin as 'yellow boys,' which he wanted to be seen shining through his [illegible] manla money, was very tenacious of his words, using those only which he thought to be the most expressive. I recollect that after he had made use of the word 'bamboozle,' a brother Senator took exception to it as not being appropriate, or obsolete, or vulgar. The Colonel did not reply at that time, but the next morning, when he came into the chamber, he was followed by several pages with armfuls of books, which they piled on BENTON'S table. As soon as an opportunity occurred, he called attention to the fact that the word 'bamboozle,' as employed by himself, had been ridiculed. 'It was a good word, sir, and very expressive.' He then opened one of the mammoth books at the place turned down, and told what WEBSTER had said of the word, namely, 'Bamboozle, v. t., to confound, to deceive, to play low tricks upon.'—Webster's Dict. And here was what WORCESTER said: 'Bamboozle, v. a., (from bam, a cheat,) to deceive, to impose on, to confound. 'Babbled, sheard, bamboozled.'—Addison.' 'Bamboozler, n., a tricky fellow.' 'As set they call bamboozers and bamboozlers.'—Arbuthnot.' And then the Colonel told Senators what RICHARD JOHNSON, WALKER and many other philologists said about this word 'bamboozle.' The Senator stooped down to read from the books with the aid of his eyeglass. He occupied at least half an hour in vindicating his use of this word 'bamboozle.'"

Mr. GORBRIGHT'S book will be found a very good Congressional "Remembrancer."

—Arne. A Sketch of Norwegian Life. By BJORNSTERNE BJORNSON. Translated by AUGUSTA PLESSNER and S. BUCHLAY-POWERS. (Boston: SEVER, FRANCIS & CO.) This little book, with its hard-looking title-page, is like a hickory-nut, rough and rigid on the outside, but containing a very agreeable amount of matter within. The lady and gentleman have, in fact, cracked it for us very handsomely, and we make our acknowledgments accordingly. We have here sixteen short stories from the pen of our author—name spelled above—with whose book, the Synnove Solbakken, the modern literary life of GAMLE NORGE is said to have been begun. He is the son of a clergyman, and was born at Kvikne, in the Dovre Fjeld, in 1832. He grew up a strong-limbed boy—

"A strong nativity, and for the rest,—

always on the rampage, and somewhat thick-headed, in the opinion of a great many. At school he learned leap-frog with assiduity, and fought some fellows in the head class. At the University he read something, but got no honors, and then he began to write plays and criticise the drama. But literature is a poor staff to lean on so near the North Pole, and he went about, in the free Bohemian way, from Christine to Upsala, from Upsala to Copenhagen, and thence back again to Bergen, where he became manager of a theatre or play-booth, and afterward edited the Aftenbladet journal, and here his biography leaves him. He is a thoroughly Norse writer, exhibiting no trace of any other literature in his books. The present shows his turn for the folklore of Norway, and reflects all the simple, coarse and matter-of-fact life of his countrymen and women in the most singularly attractive manner. If we had not already compared this little book to a hickory-nut, we should say it is like a photograph giving the downright aspect and air of the human nature he is delineating. He has a great name in the Norsey latitudes. We wish it had fewer consonants.

—The Wife's Messengers. By Mrs. M. B. HORTON. (Philadelphia: J. B. LIPPINCOTT & Co.) The Wife's Messengers is written in a style of remarkable grace and pathos. The story is of simple texture; and the authoress may swear, with Polonius, that she uses no art at all. Her materials are mainly two parallel families, and a villain. The families are two husbands and two wives, with children respectively; and the villain is an unbeliever and a scoffer, and such a bad man generally that he is thrown back into shadow, and when she makes up her mind to kill him terribly for his conduct, she does it in such a far-off, hazy way, and with such garrulity, that she might as well have let him go about his business, for all the horror she has been able to excite. But she has no genius for wicked people. Her forte is among the good and gracious feelings and gentle affections—the tenderness of womanly sorrow and the arch and touching prettinesses of children's words and ways. There are much harder and smarter lady writers, who look through society with a sharper eye and describe it with more force and effect; and these always carry away the majority of readers. But the gentler and more thoughtful sort will always find a charm in the feeling tone and quiet coloring of Mrs. HORTON'S moral stories.

—Frankenstein. By Mrs. SHELLEY. (SEVER, FRANCIS & Co., Boston and Cambridge.) In the year 1816, Lord BYRON, PERCY BYSSHE SHELLEY, Mrs. SHELLEY, and Dr. POLYDORI, being weatherbound in Geneva, agreed to write, each, some wild and spectral story calculated to thrill human nature, and make the hair of society stand on end; and the results were, a fragment by his lordship, printed along with his poem of "Mazeppa;" SHELLEY'S story of some of his early experiences, (never finished;) a raw-head-and-bloody-bones narrative from POLYDORI, too terrible to have any head or tail; and the strange story before us, with its grand predominating thought of coarse monstrosity and horror. The book is classical, so to speak, and will be read for the sake of its associations, if not for its matter and meaning, which are conveyed in the style of imaginative literature in vogue half a century ago.

—Mabel Clifton. A Novel. By FRANK BRIERWOOD. (Philadelphia: CLAXTON, REMSEN & HAFFELFINGER.) This novel takes the fancy of the young and imaginative reader—and, indeed, no reader of a less genial sort should get novels to peruse. In the preface, the authoress very eloquently pictures herself under the figure of a girl of Egypt, launching on the Nile a tiny boat with a lamp in it; and she asks, "Will it sink, gentle reader, or will the glancing waves bear it onward toward the ocean of eternity?" We are in favor of the latter alternative, certainly. This book, working out its romantic moral, closes with a powerful and ghastly delineation of the more dreadful feelings; and Mabel Clifton gasps on her dying bed in all the agonies of a vain remorse. She dies; and the softening effect of a tragic drama remains on the mind of the above-mentioned reader.

—Echoes from the Living Grave. By a Convict in Sing Sing Prison. (New-York: LODGE & BROWN.) A well-meant book, which is not calculated to be of much use for any purpose of touching and making better any of our jailbirds. It is written in that particularly religious style which people in common life are so apt to distrust, and the narrative is so hurried and slurred that the reader finds it hard to put any trust in the sincerity of the narrator. It is altogether a melancholy book.

—Marooner's Island. By F. R. GOULDING. (Philadelphia: CLAXTON, REMSEN & HAFFELFINGER.) This is a story for boys—though the girls, too, may read it with benefit—being somewhat in the instructive style of Captain MAYNE REID'S narratives. It has a number of illustrations which will fairly take young readers captive before they have read a word of the text.

—Glennair. By HELEN HAZLETT. (CLAXTON, REMSEN & HAFFELFINGER.) A very lady-like story of respectable Scottish life, busy with many interesting figures and variegated by the cosmy dialect which has been made so popular in the poetry of BURNS and the prose of SCOTT.

—Father Gabrielle's Fairy. By MARY C. FRONHAM. (Boston: American Unitarian Association.) This story is told in a charming style, and with its foreign names and other foreign traits, has a certain French air of ease and happy vivacity. It is one of the nicest of its class.

—A Summary of American History. (New-York: A. S. BARNES & CO.) This brief summary for the use of schools is a very good and comprehensive one, and well fitted to its purpose.

—Stories for Eva. By ANNA E. APPLETON. (Boston: American Unitarian Society.) A very well written little story, which will attract and gratify a thousand harmless young fancies.

—The Bible Hand-Book. A second revised edition of this valuable work is just published by JAMES S. CLAXTON, of Philadelphia.

—On Seats and Saddles, Bits and Bitting, &c. By FRANCIS DWYER, Major of Hussars in the Imperial Austrian Service. (Philadelphia: J. B. LIPPINCOTT & Co.) This is a valuable and interesting work, containing a vast amount of information concerning the horse and its management, with which all owners of this noble animal ought to be familiar.

—Ambulances in Africa. By Rev. S. A. W. JEWETT. (Cincinnati: HITCHCOCK & WALDEN.) The aim of this little volume is to recite the missionary travels of Dr. LIVINGSTONE through the wilds of South Africa, between the years 1840 and 1856, in smaller compass than the large narrative written by himself. It is illustrated with a number of wood cuts.

—The Last Atheneum. Translated from the Swedish of VICTOR RYDBERG by WILLIAM WIDGERY THOMAS. (Philadelphia: T. B. PETERSON & BROS.) This work enjoys a wide-spread popularity in Sweden, and was highly recommended for translation by the late FREDERIKA BREMER.

—FELT & DILLINGHAM, of this City, have published biographical sketches of Queen VICTORIA and Mr. DISRAELI. The volumes belong to CASSELL'S cheap library of "Representative Biographies."

—The Villa on the Rhine. Part II. of this interesting German novel, by AUERBACH, is just published by LEYPOLDT & HOLZ, of this City. It contains from Book V., chapter XV., through Book VIII.

MAGAZINES.

—The Historical Magazine. Vol. V. No. II. This tastefully-printed periodical is doing an excellent work in furnishing a sort of "Notes and Queries" medium of communication for all who are interested in the antiquities, history and biography of America, besides being a general storehouse of information on these matters, constantly and judiciously enlarged in its contents by the industrious editor, Mr. HENRY B. DAWSON, of Morrisania, N. Y. The number for February, which happens to be the one under notice, contains, among other interesting documents, General LEE'S final report on the campaign in Pennsylvania and the battle of Gettysburg. Beside matter of recent date the notes range over the whole history of the country, and point out many things, little and great, which have been hitherto unnoticed. We hope the enterprise may meet with such encouragement as to live, and grow, and bear the ripe fruit of success to which its planters are entitled.

—The American Law Review for April contains, as usual, a valuable amount of matter in reference to its specialty. It has a very eulogistic notice of the recent work on International Law, by Dr. BLUNTSCHLI, the accomplished and scholarly Swiss publicist, who, by the way, dedicates his work to one Dr. LIEBER, as having been suggested by the well-known instructions for American armies which Dr. LIEBER prepared at Mr. STANTON'S request during our late war. "The Legal Qualifications of Representatives" in Congress is discussed; the rule of law in cases of "Misrepresentations" during sales receives detailed attention; Judge BLATCHFORD'S decision in the Dramatic Copyright case of "After Dark" is given in full; the "Selected Digest of State Reports" is continued; "Digest of Cases in Bankruptcy," "Book Notices," "List of New Law Books since Jan. 1," and a Summary of Legal Events all the world over, round out a very readable and capital number.

—The Princeton Review is one of those old stand-bys which are known and appreciated by a regular clientèle, and need no further indorsement than is contained in a distinct reference to the subjects treated. The topics for the present number are: The Calvanistic Methodists in Wales; The Fundamental Principle of Morals; Planting of the American Churches; The Novel and Novel Reading; Ethics and Economics of Commercial Speculation; Froude's History of England; Disestablishment of the Irish Church; Presbyterian Reunion; Literary Notices and Intelligence. These articles cover a broad range of discussion, and in a very attractive and able manner.

—The National Quarterly Review. March gives us the thirty sixth number of this well-known publication, which has now for nine years made its quarterly appearance stored with such a variety of choice articles as make it really a magazine; although in the advancement and multiplication of periodical literature that significant word has been appropriated by the gatherers of a lighter class of writings than the quarterlies cared to present. The reversal of popular tradition, particularly when that has become sanctioned by long-standing literary record, is seldom a grateful task. But the author of the opening article, on "Diogenes the Cynic," has done a service by giving us a clearer and fairer view of that dogged philosopher's ideas and life than has usually passed current. "The Turko-Greek Question" is intelligently treated in a clear and lucid review of the diplomatic correspondence, protocols and other documents of the various European Governments concerning it. Handsome justice is accorded to the real poetic genius of "Béranger and his Songs" in a pleasant running comment on his life and influence. An industrious searcher of the past has selected and clearly arranged from the writings of the Abbé DE BOURNOUND, M. AUBIN and others, a very interesting account of the "Successive Conquests and Races of Ancient Mexico," bringing the résumé down to the conquest of CORTEZ; an historical sketch of "Columbia College;" a brief, comprehensive and useful article on "The Ruling Class in England;" a somewhat discursive essay, going to show the Asiatic origin of "Celtic Music;" a good, common sense article on "President Grant and his Cabinet;" and some twenty pages of literary "Notes and Criticisms" of high quality complete the contents of the number.

—The American Presbyterian Review. This sound and stately quarterly does not base all its claims to consideration upon venerable age or consistent sturdiness of doctrinal assertion, but is alive with the spirit of the day. Dr. ROBERT PATTERSON, of Chicago, opens the present number with a tolerably ringing blow at the geological scoffers who make sport of the Mosaic cosmogony, by showing from the highest scientific authority how the scientific theories of world-building are in constant and successive change to suit newly-discovered facts—this, apropos of the late converts to a belief in the aqueous formation of granite, and consequent confusion in the Plutonic theories. He also makes plain what many ignore or do not see, that Moses really has no theory of cosmogony, did not pretend to write science, and was thus saved from perpetrating the absurd blunders of the wise men of all ages who have tried and failed. There are sundry articles of Presbyterian interest, as the "Reunion" question; one on "The Reformed or Calvinistic Sense," (as exhibited in the Westminster Confession;) a capital plea for "Biblical Preaching," by Dr. J. B. COMPIT, of Auburn; an eloquent address before the Society of Inquiry, Union Theological Seminary, New-York, by Dr. H. S. STORRS, Jr., of Brooklyn, on "The Incarnation and the System which Stands upon It;" an interesting disquisition upon "Mr. Mill and his Critics," by that much-respected metaphysician, FRANCIS BOWEN, of Harvard College; and the usual thorough digest of contemporary literature—altogether an admirable and timely number.

The Book Smuggling Case—Testimony Taken in Detroit.

From the Detroit (Mich.) Advertiser, April 8.

On Nov. 4, 1868, HENRY J. SHAW, a dealer in books, said to be from Montreal, entered at Port Huron 204 or 205 cases of volumes brought to Sarnia from Montreal by the Grand Trunk Railway, crossed over the river and placed in the shed on the American side, according to the usual custom with freight, which must there be examined by the Government officer and the requisite duties paid. The Collector of the Port received these books at a valuation of about $5,000, and collected the amount of $1,350 in gold as the proper duty upon the value set forth. Mr. SHAW was soon arrested for smuggling and now is under bail to the amount of $2,500 to answer that charge before the United States District Court for this district, the trial having been postponed until the May Term. Testimony is now being taken before United States Commissioner WILKINS, to be sent first to Cincinnati, where one case comes up in a few days. ALPHEUS RUSSELL, United States District-Attorney, appears for the United States, and WM. E. WELLS for the claimant and on behalf of Mr. SHAW generally.

The testimony taken yesterday clearly established the fact that the 204 or 205 cases, there being some question as to the exact number, were entered by SHAW at Port Huron, that valuation of $5,000, and that a duty of $1,350 was paid upon them. That SHAW gave directions for shipping at least part of them, and that they were sent off to the Morrison office in consequence of such orders. From the testimony of the Deputy Collector at Port Huron, and of Mr. BURKE, the station-master of the Grand Trunk Railway at Sarnia, the case thus far looks very black for Mr. SHAW and his operations, inasmuch as there can be no doubt that the value of the books was not much below $20,000, if indeed, it did not fully reach that amount. It is understood that it is proposed by the defense to attempt to prove that SHAW, in his introduction of the books, sought only at that time to provide for and pay duty upon the seventy odd cases which were to be shipped to Cincinnati.

GENERAL STONEMAN.

His Report of his Administration of Affairs in Virginia—The Difficulties Experienced in Filling the Civil Offices—The State Finances.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST MILITARY DISTRICT, STATE OF VIRGINIA, RICHMOND, VA., March 31, 1869.

To the Adjutant-General of the Army, Washington, D. C.:

GENERAL: I have the honor to transmit herewith a report of the Board of Officers convened pursuant to orders from these headquarters—copy herewith inclosed—and to make, for the information of the General commanding the army, and in justice to myself, the following official statement:

When I assumed command of this district on the 2d of June last I found an order on file postponing all elections until such time as might be determined upon by the Congress of the United States. Congress soon after took the matter up, and a day was designated for holding an election. This day was postponed from time to time, but no final decision was ever determined upon. In December last I began to institute measures and to devise ways and means for filling those civil offices which were disqualified by persons who could take the test oath of office prescribed by act of Congress July 2, 1862, and the following instructions were issued to the Military Commissioners throughout the State:

(Here follow rules of the orders issued for this purpose. Gen. SCHOFIELD incidentally says that in order to expedite things and to arrive at correct results, he had previously determined to organize a Board of Officers of high rank, long experience, sound judgment, and thorough acquaintance with the people, to hear all applicants and to pass upon all applications; which, with the other duties devolving upon him, he could not properly do; and that in accordance with this determination he issued an order designating the Board, and also directed them to visit Lynchburg, Farmville, Danville, Norfolk, Alexandria, Winchester, Staunton, and Charlottesville, with the view of ascertaining every facility to the people, and enabling all to be seen or heard from who desired or would accept office, or who might have recommendations to make and wishes to express.)

Discussion was had, previous to ordering the Board, to the Republican Committees, with what results is shown by the following exhibit: Of the thirty-nine Commonwealth's attorneys recommended, two declined, nine were previous appointments by District Commander, fourteen could not take the oath of office, and eleven accepted and were appointed. In regard to the clerks of County and Circuit Courts recommended from the same source, the results were about the same.

It will be seen from the foregoing what means have been used to fill the offices in the State of Virginia made vacant by joint resolutions of Congress passed Feb. 5, 1868, and the following are the results as shown by the record: Number of offices in the State, 5,446; number filled by General SCHOFIELD, 2,281; number filled by General STONEMAN, 1,973; number able to take the oath, 332; number of vacancies yet to be filled, 2,411.

How many of those recently appointed will not accept, cannot qualify, or will be unable to furnish the requisite bonds, remains to be seen, and this number should be added to the vacancies yet to be filled.

In accounting for the very small number of persons in the State who can take the test oath of office, it must be taken into consideration that Virginia was one great battle-field during the war; that there was small chance for escape from the rigors of the Conscript laws; that nearly every man was thoroughly under the eye and control of the Confederate Government, and that some time or other nearly every one, gave "aid, countenance, comfort or encouragement" to the Government of the United States; and besides, once having taken the test oath, he was, probably almost of the Southern people, old and young, male and female, were more earnest in its prosecution.

The conclusion will force itself upon every intelligent mind that if, with all the efforts that have been made and the latitude that has been allowed, the offices in the State have not been filled by competent persons, they certainly cannot be filled, when the restrictions of any one party are so be observed and complied with, as will be the case upon the adoption of the proposed Constitution, under which it is desired by some that the people of Virginia shall be forced to live, and to the requirements of which they are expected to consent.

As to the character and qualifications of those appointed, though they are not in all cases what could be desired, yet they are in the main the best the material afforded. This should be taken into consideration that they in most cases came from that class of persons who had never before been trusted by, and in many cases are comparative strangers to, the people. Many were found who were willing to take the test oath, who, on account of their reputation, and were proved to have been among the most active participants in the rebellion. These, with a zeal ever animating new converts, were willing to take almost any oath which would secure them recognition and an office. Disappointment and discontent in these selections from this class. Very many who were known to have been Union men before, during and since the war, have not found it compatible with the dictates of their conscience to subscribe to the test oath, and put on to the service of such have been lost to the State.

My definition of loyalty to the Government has been more comprehensive than the one adopted by some political lexicographers, who would restrict its application to those, and to those only, who, in addition to the pledge themselves to vote for this or that candidate for some high office, the number of the loyal thereby being inversely proportionate to the number of candidates. That mistakes, and that some improper selections have been made, cannot be denied; but when all the circumstances and restrictions, was to be expected, and in time may be partially remedied. That those deemed not the most fit, worthy and competent, and their friends, should be disapproving, disappointed and dissatisfied, is natural. The fidelity of such is to be anticipated, but not to be feared or dreaded.

The State Executive officers who went out under the requirements of the joint resolution of Congress have not yet been replaced.

The offices have been by me considered as the civil staff of the District Commander, through whom, and by whose advice and assistance, the civil affairs of the State must necessarily be transacted, and upon whose judgment and integrity he must rely. I have, therefore, considered it due to my successor (whose arrival has been daily expected) to give him the opportunity of making his own selections, and not having him with selections of persons made by myself. I have, in doing this, been assured by those who know that the interests of the state and of individuals would not suffer thereby.

The annual expenses of the State have, during my administration of affairs, been considerably reduced, and, had it been considered politic, would have been reduced still more. The monthly expenditures from the reconstruction fund appropriated by Congress last session have averaged $1,862 50 per month; and of the money appropriated, $20,000, after paying outstanding indebtedness due when I assumed command, and the current expenses since, there remains on hand at present $17,949 30. The authority in the District Commander has been exercised to prohibit corporate authorities from increasing the indebtedness of corporations, and thereby adding to the taxes of an already overburdened people.

The financial condition of the State is, all things being considered, as good as could be expected; the political interests are not prosperous, and its political situation speaks for itself. The only claim of any importance against the State which has been ordered to be paid was one for reporting the proceedings of the Constitutional Convention. Some doubts were entertained as to the propriety of ordering its payment, but inasmuch as its justness and correctness was certified to by the chairman of the Committee on Public Printing, the Secretary of the Convention, and by the President of the same, and as its payment was urged by the Register in Bankruptcy and the Commonwealth's attorney for the City of Richmond, the payment of the claim, amounting to $2,000, was finally ordered. It has been intimated in some of the journals that the money obtained was used for improper purposes at the late Petersburg Convention. Whether or not such be the case I cannot say, and those most interested are the best able to decide.

The general quiet and good order that has existed throughout the State since my last report, and even now exists, is, under all the circumstances, worthy of special notice and particular attention. The only two cases of disorder worthy of mention, and which warranted military interference, are the one in Lee County, in the southwest corner of the State, a point running down between the two States of Tennessee and Kentucky, and the other near Norfolk. The first was caused by the conduct of a set of fugitives from justice from Kentucky and Tennessee. Orders were issued to secure their arrest. They left the State, and quiet was restored. The other was caused by a misconception on the part of the negroes living on some farms abandoned during the war by the owners. The negroes were made acquainted with their duties, and no further trouble with them is anticipated.

Several questions connected with the internal improvements in the State have presented themselves for consideration, and have been settled, if not in accordance with the wishes of all concerned, yet in a way we hoped the results will be for the benefit of the Companies, and of the State. Some of these questions have, when looking toward the sale of any of the State's interests, been [illegible] continued, and the principles of consolidation or cooperation adopted by the last Legislature of Virginia observed and continued.

In the performance of the duties assigned me, I have not been lost sight of that civil law still exists in the State, and that the Courts of justice were open to all alike; nor of the other fact that the people of Virginia were still citizens of the United States, and as such were amenable to the laws and entitled to their protection.

In the performance of the duties assigned me I have observed, and have endeavored to follow and carry out, the principle that all Governments are, or ought to be, instituted for the best interest of the governed, to engender as few antagonisms as a liberal construction and faithful administration of the laws of Congress required, to harmonize conflicting elements, and to do justice to all. How successfully this endeavor has been accomplished, it remains for results and history to determine, and for those over whom I have had a temporary control to decide.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
(Signed) GEORGE STONEMAN,
Brevet Major-General, U. S. A., Commanding.

THE FEMALE CLERKS.

How They Are Employed in the Treasury Department, With Some Account of Who They Are.

Editorial Correspondence of the Columbus (Ohio) State Journal.

EBBITT HOUSE, WASHINGTON, Saturday, April 3, 1869.

I believe you have given the readers of the Journal the "Hannah Tyler Letter" to the Independent. I will refresh your memories. HANNAH TYLER writes to the Independent substantially that the Treasury Department employs female clerks who have not the ability to tell what day of the month it is by a counting-house almanac, who do no labor for the Government, and who are selected on the recommendation of Congressmen "friends" for their pretty faces and ankles, rather than for clerical skill. The editor of the Independent says he does not know who HANNAH TYLER is, but that she is a clerk, and signs her own name, and therefore he publishes her communication.

Briefly, there is no HANNAH TYLER. I have made inquiry, and there is no such name on the rolls as a clerk.

I might stop at this, but the human heart is so constituted that it is generally ready to believe any slander on very meagre evidence, while the truth must be fortified by unimpeachable testimony. The dear old maiden ladies of both sexes have not yet learned how to be deliberate, moral of HANNAH TYLER, and they will fight like the old cats they are before they will surrender one crumb of the slander.

Now, I believe, as Hon. GEO. SPINNER said to me to-day, that among 5,000 women selected for a given duty, it is possible that there may be here and there a frail sister who will make merchandise of her virtue. It is not uncommon to find such cases even in what we call "society." But that any considerable number of these hard-working women are of loose character, I am not prepared to admit. As the charge has been made repeatedly that there is widespread demoralization and corruption among the female clerks, that the Treasury Department is a sort of Congressional harem, and the female clerks generally concubines, I determined to-day to take the investigation into my own behalf, for the benefit of the readers of the Journal, and write precisely what I found, regardless of consequences. I felt that it was due to the Department, and to the female clerks, that the investigation should be made. The different bureaus have furnished full reports of a thorough examination, and this is what I found:

First, in the Bureau of the Comptroller of the Currency—Hon. HILAND R. HULBURD, an Ohio man. Females have not generally been found to have sufficient administrative talent to organize business or take charge of a section, or division. Their work is that of detail—copying, counting out money, and so on. As a general rule they are more industrious than men—plodding on with their work while men would be more inclined to interrupt themselves with political discussions. A pretty thorough examination of their work proves that it is as well done as any in the Department. The records are clean and well kept, the writing plain, the words properly spelled, capitalization and punctuation correct. In counting money, and in all work requiring a sensitive touch, delicate and rapid manipulation and deft handling, the female clerks are so infinitely superior as to practically monopolize all those classes of work. The room in which the females work are all overcrowded and unventilated. Some there are healthy under the surroundings to make any woman who can get a decent place elsewhere banker after a situation here. The air from so many lung-furnaces, the conglomerated bad smells from small-pox, currency, printing ink, sizing and chemicals of unknown nature in such a close room, probably would almost fetid. It tells sadly in the sallow complexions of most of the women, and it is no slander on the sex to say that some are artistic enough to endeavor to repair the damages of bad air and (let me whisper it) time, by getting fresh complexions every day. There are, however, very few fresh, healthy-looking girls among them all. Keeping the Hannah Tyler theory in mind, I should say the Congressional taste is frightfully vitiated.

No man of common sense, and with that knowledge of the world which every man should inherit from his mother or learn from his sisters, can go through the Department and see these inflections without being convinced that these are not the women for licentious lives. But there is a brute, a sort of man, whose sole knowledge of the sex is based on such worthless creatures who have disgraced it, that will need further evidence. Let me say this: Even the men—that lordly sex—contract habits of toadyism by living in the Departments, where they are subject to removal at any time on the whim or caprice of their superiors. A man but the Department clerk at Washington is very apt to degenerate into flunkeyism, more or less abject, in accordance with the character of the man. I am bound in the interests of truth to confess that most women are natural flunkeys. They are born to obey, to be ruled by society, and to the husband at home. I am not surprised, therefore, to find that the female clerks are flunkeys of the most profound and discriminating character. They know to a dot how much obsequious deference they must pay to the lord and master, without compromising themselves. They know by intuition when the tyrant may be cajoled by little airs and graces. The man who supposes that this sort of thing is indicative of anything else that a simple desire to make themselves pleasant and preserve their places is a marble soldier.

As to the external evidences of character: I ask special and careful attention to this analysis of the female clerks in the Bureau of the Comptroller of the Currency. There are twenty-six in all. Of the twenty-six there are five married ladies, one is the wife of an officer now in the service, one is a daughter of the guard who defended Secretary SEWARD from assassination; one is daughter of a former chaplain of the House of Representatives; one is daughter of an officer who was killed in battle; one is a widow; the remainder are persons of good family and unimpeachable character, and nearly all, if not all, had fathers or brothers in our army. Only one appointment has been made on the recommendation of a Congressman, and both this character and ward rendered a place of high responsibility under the Government. In conclusion, Mr. HULBURD said to me, "There is not a lady employed in this Bureau whom I would not be willing to invite to my house to meet my wife, if our social circles were the same."

I went through Mr. SPINNER'S extensive Bureau with him, and the results were even more satisfying. On the general subject, General SPINNER is emphatic in his assertion that the female clerks are better than male clerks for the places of duties performed in his Bureau. The duties are responsible, and he says vastly underpaid—being principally such as are performed by bank tellers and other bank officials. The female clerks are the most rapid counters of money, and the most expert detectives of counterfeits in the department. Hardly a day passes but they throw out counterfeits that have escaped the scrutiny of the most accomplished bank officers. To any one seeing the lightning-like rapidity with which the work is done, this would seem incredible; but it is true. The girls are held to a strict account in their work, and by a severe rule in this Bureau are required to make good any deficiency in their count out of their salaries. This harsh rule necessitates occasional contributions from the whole Department for some poor inexpert who had allowed a hundred-dollar counterfeit to pass without detection. One error of this sort will absorb more than the month's salary, and if no assistance were rendered, would leave short pickings for many dependants in some cases.

I saw a brown, some very queer-looking burnt paper which had been fully identified in the Department, and its denomination, location and amount fixed. Throw a piece of printed paper into the fire, and watch it till it burns out, and fire up the chimney. The weakening letters, almost impalpable to the touch, will show just how the bank notes are identified. By the nicest kind of manipulation the ashes of the notes are fastened by some sort of gum to paper, and the work of identification is patiently pursued until accomplished.

General SPINNER employs a very large number of women. I neglected to get the exact number, supposing that I should find the figures in his last report. There are, I should think, some hundreds. They are crowded together in rooms totally inadequate to size and ventilation. I counted sixteen in a room not more than twelve by sixteen, and absolutely without ventilation of any sort, except what was strained through an outer room. It is slow suicide to work in such a room, and the sallow complexions and hollow eyes of the women proved it. No work is done in advance in any case, and we found in every room that the female clerks were so entirely occupied with their work that in most instances they did not see us. An incident occurred as we passed along which was characteristic and suggestive. A lady and gentleman approached General SPINNER and asked permission to see their two nieces in the Department, and I was introduced to General and Mrs. ——, of New-Jersey—the former an officer of distinction, the latter, I think, a daughter of an officer of the navy. One of the ladies employed as clerk is niece of two Governors, one on her father's side, one on her mother's. Another is daughter of a surgeon who built up a celebrated hospital, of national reputation. Another incident: Stopping in front of a desk where a lady was busily engaged, General SPINNER said: "I want to see her watch. This is Miss WRIGHT, of Winchester, the lady on whose information General SHERIDAN bought the battle of Winchester. The watch is a present from him." Loosening the chatelaine, Miss WRIGHT said, as she handed the watch to me," It is very pretty, but I prize General SHERIDAN'S letter accompanying it much more. You, of course, know about the battle?" "I was there." The watch is indeed an exquisite one, and very expensive, and is studded with a full complement of cavalry trinkets, including a little gold sabre, which could be drawn from the scabbard. One of the Rightangles of the Gettysburg Hospital is in this Bureau

CHICAGO.

Virtues of a Vote as Cast by City or Country—An Elegant Church Opened on Easter Sunday—Rebellion—Antietam Union Game at Academy of Music—Fulton and Hooper Dropped in Lamplighter—A Sanitary Ball Which Varied from the Rounds.

From our Occasional Correspondent.

CHICAGO, Sunday, April 3, 1864.

A humor letter was written on the very eve of a great battle by Butler, which was to decide for long years the question of party or no party; a question which for weeks before its decision had stirred up the good citizens of Chicago as little short of a hostile invasion as the shock of an earthquake could stir them. Lapses of the result being doubtful, it could be considered nothing; and when the numbers, the staggering efforts and determined portents of those arrayed against the president were taken into the account. The issue of the conflict, if not a surprise, was a joy of the greatest character to every citizen with vision large enough to see a score of years into the future, and heart warm enough to sympathize with the guidance of the half-hundred millions of a huge city, where the green grass, and bright flowers, and trees, walks, fountains, lakes, with God's sunlight and pure air, to make every sight enjoyable, persuade to forget their sorrows while imparting strength for the daily life-struggle. The victory was a decisive one. It moved to the city upward of 1,000 names, on the Union side, to create a permanent element of benefit and blessing to the multitudes to be affected in the coming time by the rural delights offered them without money and without price. One who is fresh from the Central Park of New-York, and knows the value of that paradise to the city said which it pacifies, need make no apology for feeling the warmest sympathy with those magnanimous and enlightened Chicagoans who fought their late fight so valiantly, and came off conquerors.

In the manner of game-touring their streets by the process described in a former letter, the success was far less than was anticipated. The plan, it was thought, was approved by a majority of the Common Council. Sixteen out of thirty members were announced as sure to go for it. A vote, however, at a recent meeting, showed fourteen for the project and fourteen against it, and the Mayor's casting vote in the negative upset the hopes of those who had been sanguinely counting upon the passage of the measure. The result shows far less intelligence and enterprise than the one above recorded. The latter, indeed, was determined by the people, the former by the city magnates—the Common Council alone. This makes a wide difference on the score of capability to judge aright as to what a city really needs and demands. Had the body of voters been privileged to decide this matter, as in the other case, the reproach to Chicago that the lane as mance attached to her streets would have been wiped out, and the stranger and sojourner would no longer find himself forced to wander about with as little aid from the city authorities to direct him as if he were in the labyrinthine streets of Egyptian Cairo itself.

OPENING OF A NEW CHURCH.

Chicago has its Grace Church as well as New-York City. The former might seem to have been following in the wake of its well-known namesake in the matter of elegant and imposing architecture and finish, not less than helping to interpret the name "Grace," borne by both, agreeably to the modern idea, which makes the word press means the Gospel, free favor to those only who have plethoric purses, and not to the lowly poor, for whom the Gospel was specially preached in the rude and primitive times. This Grace Church is indeed a superb temple to worship the Jesuits in. It is built in the Gothic style of the thirteenth century. Its material is mainly of Joliet marble, the columns and ornamental work being of Iowa marble, the whole structure costing not far from $150,000. Its architecture, 86 feet by 208 in dimension, fairly flashes with gilding and gorgeous decoration, so disposed, however, as not to offend the eye or taste by the appearance of excessive tawdriness. Its location at the corner of Prairie-avenue and Wabash-avenue is fine, and the pews are certain to be occupied within a reasonable time. Pews were sold on Monday and Tuesday, the total amount realized, including premiums, being $62,000. The highest price paid for a pew was $2,100, the buyer being J. MASON LOOMIS. This sum, with the $60,000 realized for the old church—a plain frame building, occupying a very valuable lot on the corner of Wabash-avenue and Peck-court—will leave a debt on the Society easily manageable. The church reared reflects great credit on the enterprise and liberality of its people, and will yet be likely to play a useful part in the work of promoting the true interests of the town. Right Rev. J. BECKWITH, Bishop of Georgia, preached the sermon at the opening of the church on Easter Sunday, before a crowded congregation. His reverence had been a chaplain in the rebel army during the times that so tried the souls of his section, but the Rood Tabernacle proclaimed did not color his sentiments nor affect his discourse on the present occasion, in the slightest. He pronounced a sermon worthy the occasion, receiving the closest attention and earnest commendation of the throng he addressed.

RIVALRIES.

The restlessness under what is regarded as the dominating tendencies of some sections of the Episcopal Church is not confined to New-York or places adjacent thereto, but is making itself felt here and throughout all this circumjacent territory. Several clergymen of ability and standing in this diocese, together with a larger number of well-known laymen, have recently published a "solemn protest against all teachings, innovations, machinations and devices that are employed for unsettling the Protestant Episcopal Church, corrupting her doctrine, debasing her worship, and overturning her long-established rites, ceremonies and usages." After giving certain extracts from late writings of Episcopal divines—among them Bishop WHITEHOUSE, of this diocese—alleged to favor the said "innovations," &c., they declare that in their judgment the extracts in question "are not in harmony, but the reverse, with the doctrines and principles of the Protestant Episcopal Church." The protesting party proposes to hold a general meeting in June next, in Chicago, of all the evangelical clergy and laity of their Church who sympathize with the spirit and object of the protest. The paper is manfully and earnestly written, and seems to breathe the spirit of men calmly determined to make whatever sacrifices are necessary to save the Church from harm by saving it from erroneous doctrine and practice. The meeting in June will be awaited with no little curiosity and interest as to its developments.

PURCHASE OF AMERICAN CAPTIVE.

Mr. LEONARD W. VOLK, a sculptor of this city, now and for several months in Italy, has written to the Academy of Design here that the mission intrusted to him to buy casts for the Academy has been achieved, and that the casts were shipped from Leghorn in January, and may be daily expected. This procurement is the result of a donation made to the Academy by Mr. J. T. SCANNON, and in selecting Mr. VOLK for carrying the wishes of the donor into effect, the choice, it is shown, has fallen on one rarely qualified to perform the work. The casts are forty-two in number, embracing busts, torses, bas-reliefs, &c. They will prove a most valuable acquisition by the Academy, in whose rooms they are soon to be set up. I have been permitted to see a letter from Mr. VOLK, written to Dr. R. O. ROGERS, of this city, brother of the sculptor HARPOLEN ROGERS, of Rome, in which he gives a pleasant account of a dinner party given by Mr. ROGERS, on the 15th of February, to our countryman, the poet LONGFELLOW. Fourteen guests sat down to the dinner, which was a rechercherie and capital one, and enlivened with a wit and eloquence, and genial hilarity, to make the occasion to the writer a memory ever fragrant. I will add, while on this topic, that HARPOLEN ROGERS has resided in Rome since 1845, and has won a high position among his country's sculptors, and besides this a large fortune, not always, indeed, waiting on merit and fame. I may state for those of your readers who may not know or remember it, that Mr. ROGERS is at present engaged in constructing the Soldiers' Monument to be placed at Detroit, at a cost of $[illegible] under contract for Providence, R. I., the smaller one, and a Lincoln monument for the City of Philadelphia, price $[illegible]. He was selected to do these important works from twenty several competitors, and it is believed that he will fully justify the discerning preference thus shown him.

THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY OF THE NORTHWEST.

I was present, the other day, at an examination of the students of this Seminary, fourteen of whom graduate with the term just closed. The whole number is thirty-six. This is a fair show for a seminary which has hardly passed its first decade, and which, like most similar enterprises, has had its trials and struggles to get planted. Its prospects now seem favorable for an auspicious future. Its main benefactor, Mr. CYRUS H. MCCORMICK, whose liberal gift several years ago of $100,000, laid firmly the foundations of its endowment, is engaged in an unfortunate controversy just now, as to the conditions on which the last quarter of his donation should be given. The three quarters have been paid to the institution; the remaining $25,000 are withheld on the ground that one of the Professors, Dr. WILLIS LORD, turned Abolitionist, instead of remaining conservative on the subject of slavery, as he was considered to be, when he assumed his present position. The ground of withholding "part of the price" promised seems, to an outsider, ridiculously trivial and inadequate, especially in the present obsolete condition of the slavery question. The money is not forthcoming, however, though "so much stated in the bond." But long rapid letters are written in the Northwestern Presbyterian, published here, to prove that it ought not to be paid. It seems a very small matter to wrangle about, and yet matters as larger often make much of the trouble in communities. The Seminary probably can get along without the few thousands in dispute, though, in its infant condition, the loss is a thing of some moment. The dispute, and especially its publicity, is not a record that those fomenting and abetting it will be likely, as years run on, to recall with pride.

The Crosby Opera House made a narrow escape from burning on Tuesday morning. The fire broke out on the second floor of the Music Hall connected with the Opera House, and but for the prompt and energetic efforts of the firemen the flames would soon have made it their prey, with the St. James Hotel, joined to the other almost as one building. It was fortunate in not having its fame culminate in such a blaze as this. C. V. S.

Proposed Amendments to the Constitution of Ohio.

A resolution has been adopted by the Senate of Ohio to amend the Constitution of the State. It proposes to abolish Probate Courts; to establish Common Pleas Courts in each county of the State, with one or more Judges resident therein, which Court shall have all the jurisdiction it now possesses, and jurisdiction in probate matters. The proposed amendment relieves the Supreme Judges from holding District Courts, leaving them only to hold a Supreme Court at the capital, with the jurisdiction of that Court unaffected. A District Court is provided for by dividing the State into fifteen judicial districts, according to Congressional Districts, and a Court shall be elected, any three of whom shall hold a District Court in each county at least twice in each year. The District Judges are to be independent of the Supreme and Common Pleas Judges. The District Court is given appellate jurisdiction upon trials of facts in civil cases originating in Common Pleas, and its jurisdiction, as is now vested in each Court, and the original jurisdiction with the Supreme Court. Judges are to hold their terms for five years; the Supreme Judges to be elected by the electors of the State, the District Judges by the electors of their respective districts, and Common Pleas Judges by the electors of their respective counties.

FINANCIAL.

INDIANAPOLIS AND VINCENNES
RAILROAD COMPANY
First Mortgage Forty-year Bonds.
Interest Seven Per Cent, per Annum,
Principal Secured by Sinking Fund, in the City of New-York. Guaranteed, Jointly and Severally, by
THE INDIANAPOLIS, CINCINNATI AND LAFAYETTE RAILROAD CO.
THE PITTSBURG, CINCINNATI AND ST. LOUIS RAILWAY CO.
THE COLUMBUS, CHICAGO AND INDIANA CENTRAL RAILWAY CO.;
The latter guarantee being endorsed by the Pennsylvania Central Railroad Co.
Lines connected in Business as the entire road, which is equal to about $10,000 per mile. This road is now approaching its completion; it traverses a rich and populous district in the State of Indiana, and will soon constitute an important link in the Trunk Line, extending from the Atlantic cities to the Southwest, via Cairo.
The intrinsic value of the road itself, combined with the guarantee of four other important railroad corporations in the world, render these bonds among the safest investments on the market.
We confidently recommend them as a most desirable security for parties investing for themselves or in trust for others.
Also, Guaranteed Six Per Cent Bonds of same Railway Company, of which one per Cent. per annum and coal half the net revenue of the road, in excess of that amount, is guaranteed to the holders in perpetuity by the same endorsed corporations.
A limited quantity of these choice securities are offered for sale on favorable terms by
